Biographical history: Brown, Jill (1942-2011)

Born in Hertfordshire, where her father, Eric, taught Science at Haileybury (he later went on to become an eminent Entomologist). She was the third of five children, her mother Jacqueline was also a fine Botanist. Her early years were marked by a period when her father and mother were posted to the Solomon Islands and took the younger children. Life was very basic living on a Pacific Island shortly after the Second World War, but it was a place of freedom and adventure for young children. This period had a profound effect on the rest of her life. On her return to England she was sent to St Christopher's School, Letchworth and then attended The Central School of Art in London where she became interested in fabric design, which she followed up in Paris. For a number of years she followed this line, but along the way became interested in photography and eventually became a full time photographer and photo journalist. The Middle East became her interest, where she travelled extensively, particularly in Lebanon and the Gulf states. She was associated with Middle East Economic Digest, producing many of their front covers and for a while ran the MEPHA (Middle East Photographic Archive). She was commissioned by various international organizations and travelled to the Afghanistan/Pakistan border to photograph Afghan refugee women and children in the camps. Her interest in design remained, and she produced magnificent photographic collections of tiles, costumes/fabrics and Bedouin jewellery. In 1986 Jill married John Bulloch, a journalist specialising in Middle Eastern affairs and settled in London and eventually Oxford. They adopted a Turkish brother and sister and had a very happy family life which included two children from John's former marriage. John died in 2010 after a long period of ill health. Jill Brown died in 2011.
