THE COLLEGE

St Antony’s is a postgraduate college which specialises in the inter-disciplinary study of Europe, Russia and the other successor states of the former Soviet Union, the Middle East, Africa, Japan, South and Southeast Asia, China and Latin America. Fellows of the college are specialists in modern history, language and literature, politics, economics, anthropology, sociology and international relations. Visiting and Research Fellows, as well as Senior Associate Members, complement the Fellowship. Junior Members of the college are men and women working towards higher degrees of the University.

The corporate designation of the college is ‘The Warden and Fellows of St Antony’s College in the University of Oxford’. Its foundation was made possible by a gift of the late Antonin Besse of Aden, a leading merchant of French nationality. Provisional arrangements for the foundation of the college were made by a decree passed by Congregation on 21 September 1948. On 30 May 1950, a further decree bestowed on the college the status of a New Foundation. Its main functions were then defined as: ‘(a) to be a centre of advanced study and research in the fields of modern international history, philosophy, economics and politics; (b) to provide an international centre within the University where graduate students from all over the world can live and work together in close contact with senior members of the University who are specialists in their field; (c) to contribute to the general teaching of the University, especially in the fields of modern history and politics’.

In Michaelmas term 1950, the college opened its doors on Woodstock Road in a former Anglican convent built in the 1860s that had hitherto been used by the University as a graduate hostel. Today, many of the academic facilities, the library and the administration of the college can be found in the old convent, now known as the Main Building. In 1970, the newly built Hilda Besse Building was opened. Named after the wife of the Founder, herself a benefactress of the college, the Besse Building houses the Hall, Common Rooms, Buttery and other rooms for college functions. In 1993 a new building was opened, housing a new lecture theatre as well as the Nissan Institute of Japanese Studies and the Bodleian Japanese Library. In 2000 on the college’s 50th anniversary year, HRH The Princess Royal inaugurated the Founder’s Building, containing extra accommodation and teaching space and named in honour of Antonin Besse. Other college properties, both within and beyond the curtilage, include the centres for regional studies, student residences and the Warden’s lodgings.

The original governing body of the college consisted of the Warden, the Sub-Warden, the Bursar and seven students. The college quickly grew and became recognised by the University and beyond. On 1 April 1953, a Charter of Incorporation was granted and the Queen in Council approved the Statutes of the college. On 2 October 1962, a Supplementary Charter was granted to enable the college to admit women as well as men. On 21 May 1963 a statute was passed in Congregation making the college a full college of the University; the Queen in Council approved this decision on 20 December 1963. The body of the college consists of the Warden, the Bursar, some 40 Fellows, about 470 students and, at any time, more than 120 Senior Members.
The name, St Antony’s, was chosen by the group set up to create the new college, the St Antony’s Foundation, and intended to allude to the name of the Founder. For many years there was some ambiguity about whether the patron saint was St Antony the Abbot (17 January) or St Antony of Padua (13 June). In 1961, the college was persuaded by one of its members that St Antony the Abbot was more appropriate; the college also decided that the college flag should be flown on both saints’ days. Nine years earlier, in 1952, the college coat of arms had been designed in the colours of the Red Sea (Red) and desert sands (Gold) with mullets borrowed from Antonin Besse’s trademark and crosses of St Antony the Abbot.

THE COLLEGE YEAR 2009–10

The major developments in the college this year included the following:

Buildings and Infrastructure

- The cladding for the new Zaha Hadid designed building, provisionally named ‘Softbridge’ was chosen, and an application made to Oxford City Council as part of wider planning permission
- A major donation allowed progress to be made towards the Gateway Buildings, a proposed new complex of buildings on the Woodstock Road side of the college. The buildings will form the new college entrance and include the lodge and student accommodation, as well as college administration offices
- The Hilda Besse building became Grade II listed; ‘It has special architectural interest for its skilful application of concrete in a modern interpretation of the traditional hall,’ Historic England reported
- The ICT department unveiled a five-year plan, involving upgrades of the college’s wireless infrastructure

Academic Initiatives

- The European Studies Centre launched a new programme for Media and Democracy in Central and Eastern Europe (MCDEE)
- The North American Studies Programme has been finalised and will launch in 2010
- The project to collect and catalogue the papers of the college’s first warden, Sir William Deakin, was completed

College Affairs

- The college was approached by Wolfson College, Cambridge, to discuss a twinning arrangement, which was warmly received by the college’s Governing Body; discussions will continue
- The first ‘St Antony’s Looks at the World’ event was held, which involved inviting alumni to college for panels and discussions led by our fellows, as part of our alumni and development work; it was deemed a success by college leadership
FROM THE BURSAR

The theme of my last two annual reports has been steady progress against a background of continuing financial uncertainty. I am pleased to be able to tell you that the steady progress continues. I am less pleased to have to tell you that so does the financial uncertainty.

The main indication of our steady progress is that for the year ended 31 July 2009 we had a surplus of £108,000. This is the seventh successive year we have had a surplus.

There are two aspects of the 2008/9 surplus which are particularly pleasing. Firstly, as I mentioned last year Governing Body has decided to reduce the amount we withdraw from the General Endowment from 4.5% to 3.5% over five years. As part of this process for 2008/9 we reduced the percentage withdrawal from 4.3% to 4.1%. This means we are using less of the General Endowment and preserving more of it for the future.

Secondly, we have been able to continue to increase our maintenance expenditure by more than inflation; for 2008/9 the increase was over 16%. This continues to have a visible impact on the state and appearance of our buildings. I hope those of you who have been in the SCR recently appreciated its improved appearance. Many of the improvements are less visible but they have been achieved all the same. This is, however, not an area about which we are complacent; a lot remains to be done.

The uncertainty in the financial markets had a major impact reducing our General Endowment from £16.5 million at 1 August 2008 to £14.3 million at 31 July 2009. This meant that the amount we could take from the General Endowment in 2008/9 was £89,000 less than budgeted. Fortunately this was more than compensated for by the College Funding Formula (‘the CFF’), the yearly instalment of which gave us an unbudgeted £143,000 in 2008/9. As I explained last year the CFF is the mechanism by which for the first time the University pays graduate colleges a share of the government funding it receives. Without the CFF we would have been in deficit last year.

Financial uncertainty has also had an effect on the year ended 31 July 2010. Our budget is prepared some time before we know how many new students will be coming to the college. Last year’s budget assumed that a similar percentage of students would accept their offer of a place as had done so in the past. It turned out that significantly fewer accepted their offer than previously. A survey of those who had not taken up their place showed that financial concerns were overwhelmingly the main issue which led applicants not to come to Oxford. The financial impact of this is that student fees for 2009/10 will be £88,000 less than budgeted and the CFF in which student numbers are a factor will be £62,000 less than budgeted. At the time of writing the results for 2009/10 are not available but our fingers are very firmly crossed.

While the financial markets look as though they will remain volatile in 2010/11 our budget again shows us in surplus mainly because it looks as though there will be a significant increase in our summer conference income. Some of our existing customers have increased their booking and we will be running our own Summer School under Dr Paul Chaisty in conjunction with the Department for Continuing Education for the second time. The Domestic Bursar and his staff are to be congratulated on achieving the additional business.

That is enough about financial uncertainty. Let’s return to the progress we are making. Those walking along the Woodstock Road past the Middle East Centre have recently been going past some rather impressive sculptural shapes in its garden. These are samples of the various claddings which are being considered for the Zaha Hadid building for the Centre. Choosing the best cladding for the building is the last step before we go out to tender for its construction.

Similarly the £4 million donation referred to in the Warden’s report is a significant step towards building the Gateway Buildings which will also be on the Woodstock Road and which will provide a new college entrance and lodge, and student accommodation.

All this progress would be impossible without the dedication and hard work of the College staff. We are grateful to them all. As always there have been departures. Comparisons are always invidious but that greeted with most trepidation was Mark Walker’s resignation. Mark has been with the college for many years. For very many generations of Antonians, Mark has been the chef who ensured they got excellent food. He is a personal friend of many and we were all very sorry to see him go. His successor Andrew Tipton from University College has however hit the ground running and the standard of our food remains something we can boast about.

In the Main Building the only change has been Emma Tracy, our Development Director, who has moved on after four years which saw the start of our Annual Fund and some very significant donations.

We thank all of them for their contribution to the college and wish them well.

And last but not least I would like to thank the students for their interest in and support of the college. We are particularly grateful to the Graduate Common Room President Alex Martin and her Executive for all the hard work they do for the college.

Allan Taylor
THE GRADUATE COMMON ROOM

Although all GCR Presidents undoubtedly write something similar in the College Record, this past year has been both a busy and successful one. St Antony’s truly benefits from an active and diverse student body, which takes the initiative in organising exciting events, whether official or spontaneous. Much of the hard work has been done by our dedicated GCR Committee, assisted by many volunteers, and their accomplishments are duly recorded here.

To begin, this year’s VP Academic Teodora Dimitrova has been active in two main areas of student anxiety: exam preparation and career prospects. Two exam preparation sessions were held in Trinity term by study experts and both were very well attended. Assisted by the fabulous Jane Chanaa (star Career Adviser and also one of our alumni), Teodora has done a lot to improve the relationship between St Antony’s and the Careers Service. She deftly led the newly inaugurated Career Ambassadors team, which is part of a new program run by the Oxford Careers Service. The committee, comprised of Alexander Bristow, Jessie Hronesova and Tania Saeed, worked with Teodora to publicise career events around college and on our website, as well as assist in preparations for the Career Path Conference.

Career Path, held 22 May, attracted around 80 attendees from both St Antony’s and other colleges. As President, I assembled a team of core volunteers, including Teodora, and the Career Ambassadors, Sonia Andolz, Hannah Phillip, Danilo Limoeiro, Jaemin Shim, Andreas Knab, Joan Timoneda, and Martin Deleixhe, who were indispensible to the Conference’s success. Held in three main parts, the conference featured Governing Body Fellows (Warden Margaret MacMillan, Avi Shlaim, Diego Sanchez-Ancochea, and surprise guest Paul Kennedy), St Antony’s alumni (Jane Chanaa, Nigel Gould-Davies, Joanna Gorska and Christopher Abel) and current students (Sonia Andolz, Christopher Kutarna, Cathy Baldwin and Justin Zorn). The beautiful, sunny day ended with informal networking in the Buttery over glasses of wine and juice.

Next up, our VP Welfare Marina Klavina set herself the goal of making welfare more visible and accessible to all students at St Antony’s. In a lovely gesture on Valentine’s Day, she pidded all students a Welfare Card, complete with Oxford’s emergency numbers, welfare addresses and a delicious treat. She also took all efforts to repair the long-broken condom machine in order to secure a safe provision of contraception, and this machine is now functioning adequately. At the beginning of each term, the Welfare Team put on a Welfare Tea and Cake event in the Café, where students could mingle, relax and meet their student representatives and advocates. Last but certainly not least, she organised the peer support training for the college, which will be run by the Counselling Service in Michaelmas term of 2010, thus providing the college with a longer-term, skilled welfare structure. All who have met Marina or attended her events have been impressed by her dedication to improving the general welfare environment of the college.
The very active Men's Officer, Danilo Limoeiro, organised two exciting and original events so far this year. The first was a talk on the history of chivalry, followed by a sophisticated whiskey tasting in Hilary term. The second featured a presentation on mediation complete with a practice session, followed by a talk on drinking habits in Japan and South Korea and a saké tasting in Trinity term. Both events were run with the help of St Antony’s volunteers, who certainly succeeded in both entertaining and informing our guests. Moreover, efforts were made to ensure that these wouldn’t be male-exclusive events: ladies were encouraged to attend – indeed they almost outnumbered the men! The aim of each event was to create a positive men’s network at St Antony’s, through which Danilo sought to spread and discuss positive values, such as chivalry, relaxation techniques and healthy drinking habits.

As our energetic Women’s Officer, Hannah Phillip organised a screening and discussion of the film ‘Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown’ by Pedro Almodóvar to promote dialogue between men and women in college. Along with Adrian Rogstad, our dynamic Social Action Coordinator, Hannah also organised an ‘Amnestea’ on International Women’s Day, encouraging students to send letters to individual women in countries at risk. Hannah, Adrian and Stephanie Silverman also organised a film screening and fundraiser of ‘We Are Together’ to raise money for the Agape Orphanage in South Africa, to great reception and success. Adrian succeeded in finally implementing a test Charity Levy, following the lead of previous Social Action Coordinator Remzi Cej. A total of £80 was raised in the first round, adding to various other donations totalling £300 to be built on and distributed in the upcoming terms. Also on the social action front, Lisa Pascoe led the initiative to start a charity collection at the end of Trinity to capitalise on the vast amounts of belongings that students leave behind as they leave college. With the help of Adrian, Hannah and Ben Eacott, at least four boxes of food, 20–25 bin bags of clothes and other goods such as books were delivered to Asylum Welcome in Cowley, Red Cross, Oxfam and Mind charity shops. As a whole, the Welfare Team has succeeded in adding a distinct flavour of collective action to the college, for which they are to be thanked.

This year's GCR Social Team, led by VP Social Events Vidhya Ramalingan and supported by Linda Van der Horst, Mari van Epp and Keya Madhvani, has worked tirelessly to maintain a vibrant college social life through a wide range of events and exchanges. In addition to well-attended bops each term, the team liaised with Oxford's international societies to host events with themes spanning the globe (including Turkish, Brazilian, Balkan, Lebanese, American and African nights). Some of the events held this year raised money for earthquake relief in both Haiti and Chile. We also showcased the amazing musical talents of St Antony's students with an incredibly successful Open Mic Night, where students joined together or performed solo playing guitar, piano, ukulele, violin, drums, or using their own voices. In addition, we helped to host St Antony's Poker League Grand Final in the Late Bar, where seven finalists vied to be St Antony's poker champion. Finally, we ended the year with an amazing live performance in the Late Bar by St Antony's very own band, where students danced away their exam stress to the sound of their fellow Antonians’ music. The Social Team has succeeded in maintaining St Antony’s hard-earned reputation for being Oxford’s most social, welcoming and diverse college and their diligent efforts should not be underestimated.

In Hilary term, Social Secretary for Dinners Vedica Kant organised two formal dinners at St Antony’s, both of which were completely booked. Both dinners were special affairs not just in terms of food, courtesy our new chef, but for the post dinner entertainment. For the first dinner Vedica organised a Motown night with themed hits being played throughout the evening, and for the second, dinner was followed by entertainment from the 20-piece Magdalen Swing Band. One exchange dinner was organised with St Hilda’s. During Trinity, given students’ busy schedule, only one formal dinner was held. However, given that it was the sole dinner in the term it was a large affair with 90 attendees. During the term, three extremely successful exchange dinners were organised with Green Templeton, St John’s and Jesus, each of which were completely sold out and greatly enjoyed by those who attended.

The largest social event of the year was our annual Summer Ball, given the theme of ‘Paradise Lost’ and held on 29 May. Guests enjoyed a convivial evening that was thematically tailored to the clashing worlds of Heaven and Hell popularised in John Milton’s epic poem for which the ball was named. After a champagne reception and formal dinner, both of which were complemented by live musical entertainment, guests were treated to a devilish salsa dance in the depths of Hell (Late Bar). Following the salsa, guests ascended the ‘Stairway to Heaven’ for a classical waltz through the clouds (dining hall). After the waltz, St Antony’s own live band, led by lead vocalist Elena Schak and supported by Peter Cole, Justin Hempson-Jones, Joan Timoneda, Francisco Vera, Tom Brothwell, Salvatore Morelli and Patricia Espinoza, took over Heaven as DJ Gary Slater provided some hellish tunes below. One of the UK’s hottest new bands, The Cheek, headlined the event and dazzled the crowd with their newly released single ‘Just One Night’. The evening was enhanced by a special cocktail bar provided by Brown’s Restaurant, a late-night snack provided by the Big Bang, beer provided by SAB Miller, ice cream provided by G&D’s, fudge provided by the Fudge Kitchen, and poultry provided by Alden’s of Oxford. Special thanks go to the entire Ball Committee for their tireless work: Rucker Culpepper, Sabrina Brandt, Davis Tarwater, Toni Mladenova, Florian Bersier, Sarah Ball, Kevin Jones, Peter Cole and Ashley Hill.

The GCR Environmental Officer, Christopher Wratil, has been extremely proactive in the field of energy usage in the college. Together with the Domestic Bursar, he initiated a dialogue about how to save energy in college accommodation and administration buildings. The administration agreed to install time thermostats for the central heating system in all houses of the accommodation, and this task shall be carried out during the summer. Due to Chris’s unfailing energy and argumentative skills, the GCR also passed a motion to run bops with re-usable plastic cups instead of non-reusable ones. This will be implemented by him and the Bar Management at the beginning of Michaelmas term. Lastly, Chris constructed and conducted a food survey, which will be evaluated by the GCR and the college administration in Michaelmas term, in order to monitor the quality of the food and include feedback from Antonians. He has also been in discussion with Chef Andrew Tipton about special dietary requirements and other food issues. I am not alone in appreciating Chris’s initiative in these areas.

Sonia Andolz, the dedicated Keeper of the Attic, has truly transformed the once cluttered and dusty space where Antonians store their belongings during our many term breaks. With the help of several other college volunteers, Sonia has spent hours cleaning the Attic in order to make space for new students’ bags and boxes, as well as organising a very successful attic sale and donating the remaining items to local charities, including Oxfam. All who have seen Sonia in action cannot help but be impressed by her can-do spirit, positive attitude and organisational prowess.

One of the biggest changes made by this year’s GCR has been the reinvention of our webpage, thanks to gifted Webmaster Florian Bersier. By adding new, interactive, features, Florian has made our webpage a go-to site for St Antony’s students, whether incoming or current. He has also used his expertise to assist other GCR members with publicising and organising events, notably the Summer Ball and the Career Path Conference. His impressive work can be viewed here: http://www.sant.ox.ac.uk/gcr/index.html.

Both the Bar, ably captained by Milos Damnjanovic and the Café, seamlessly run by Saagarika Dadu, have proven to be recession-proof, with sales remaining high and customers plentiful. Thanks to both Milos and Saa, as well as all the employees of both the Buttery and its alter ego the Late Bar, for dedicating hours of precious study time to maintaining these services throughout the year. A heartfelt thanks is expressed by all members of the college.

Although parts of the college gym have been broken since the beginning of last term, Sports Officers Sean O’Leary and Peter Cole have made several efforts to replace old equipment. In particular, we have purchased a new exercise bike designed to cater for people with injuries, and will replace the broken treadmill with a state-of-the-art machine by Michelmas term. Thanks to both Sean and Peter for ensuring that the gym is a useful and safe environment for all our students and staff.

As for our teams themselves, St Antony’s has seen some encouraging results in rowing, football and ice hockey this year.

The Boat Club will look back on the year 2009–10 as the first chapter in a new volume of its history. The Men’s squad enters the year 2010–11 with 15 returning rowers, whereas this year we had three. We will be strengthened by £2,000 from BCG, whereas this year we had no such sponsorship. This year we organised more outings, convened more coached sessions, and entered more boats in regattas than any time in recent memory. Studded with extraordinarily talented rowers, supported by a dedicated committee, and with the unflinching support of the GCR at their backs, the St Antony’s Boat Club is surely going to make its presence felt on the Isis in 2010–11.

Several successes and individuals deserve to be circled out. President Saagarika Dadu and Capitanos Peiro Tortola and Katarina Uhl performed a miraculous feat in organising many successful initiation events, which inspired many allegiances to the Boat Club.
Many returning members and old rowers contributed no less energetically, and they continue to be the Club’s most valuable asset. Their hard labour soon paid off, as both the Men’s and Women’s crews booked victories at Christ Church Regatta in Michaelmas. In Hilary, talk of blades was in the air, as M1 bumped time after time in Torpids – only to be denied their deserved trophies by a klaxon on the final day. The other crews battled no less valiantly. And finally, in Trinity, SABC entered an unprecedented third Men’s crew in Summer Eights, further evidencing the tremendous enthusiasm for rowing at our college. W1 showed incredible grit, not allowing mishaps early in the tournament to prevent them from rowing the full length of the river on the final day. M2 experienced the full range of bumps-race emotions, trouncing Keble and Teddy Hall on days 1 and 2, but finding an intractable opponent in teletubby-clad St John’s, and ultimately conceding a bump to Balliol. But it was M1 who fought the toughest fight. On four successive days, they sparred with Wadham the entire length of the river, coming ever so close to delivering on the Club’s motto: ‘mors a tergo’ – death from behind!

St Antony’s Boat Club was more than a formidable opponent on the river this year. On behalf of new President Andreas Knab, I want to thank everyone who participated in this community and in the sport of rowing this year, especially our captains Erin Kelly, Henrik Jonstromer, Katharina Uhl, Linda Van der Horst, Piero Tortola, and Rolf Fredheim. Together we created something that we can be proud of, and in the process we enriched not only the Boat Club, but also our college and, perhaps not least, each other.

St Antony’s Football Club, led by Captains Erleend Grøner Krogsta and Mat Savelli, approached a season clouded in uncertainty as only 3–4 players were left from the previous year. Thanks to an aggressive recruitment campaign we were able to secure enough players to continue having two teams. Following last year’s strong second place in the first division, the first team struggled to gel the potentially lethal mix of American marines, Catalan separatists, British experience and Russian intelligence to win games. After several narrow defeats and draws that should have been wins, we eventually had to accept a bitter relegation. On the bright side, the second team offered stellar performances all year through, and ended up winning the third division in the face of stiff competition. As soon as the season was over, the team relocated to Essaouira, Morocco to play and eat grilled sardines. Based in a stunning villa in the middle of town, we played football on the beach every day, teaching technically gifted Moroccans a thing or two about the merits of organisation. The fruits of the trip were reaped when we proceeded to win the Mansfield Road six-a-side tournament in a very impressive fashion. The season was crowned with what must be a club record: an 8–0 victory over Nuffield in the annual unfriendly.

It has been another hugely successful season for the Oxford Ice Hockey Club, in which St Antony’s is well represented with three players. Chana Hoffmitz this year not only captained the women’s Ice Hockey Club to Varsity glory, but also scored a crucial goal in what proved to be a closely fought 5–4 victory over the hated Tabs. Playing to a raucous capacity crowd of over 900 at the Oxford Ice Rink, the 90th Men’s Blues VM was an intense affair, with the lead changing hands five times. Not shy of drama, Oxford tied the game at 6–6 with 30 seconds remaining, before winning it in sudden-death overtime.
Antonian Calum Nicholson was named Oxford Man of the Match, turning aside 31 shots as team goaltender. Following the VM, the men’s team entered the playoffs as the second seed in the league and went on to win all three playoff rounds against Cambridge, London and then Newcastle in the final, thereby successfully defending their National Championship title from 2009. Antonian Johannes Sjostrand, the heart of the team’s defence corps, played a crucial role in limiting opponents’ chances for a clear shot on goal throughout the playoffs, and was named Man of the Match in the final at the Sheffield Arena for his outstanding work.

On the academic side, the St Antony’s International Review (STAIR), Oxford’s only peer-reviewed academic journal of international affairs, had a landmark year. Celebrating its fifth anniversary, STAIR launched two major initiatives aimed at expanding the journal’s scope and impact: issues are now available online through IngentaConnect (www.ingentaconnect.com/content/stair/stair), and beginning next year, the journal will have a new format, containing both a themed section and a general section of articles on various international affairs subjects. In addition to introducing these significant changes, STAIR published two issues this year as usual. The first issue – STAIR’s tenth issue overall – was edited by Diarmuid Torney and Annika Greup and focuses on the theme ‘New Directions in Climate Change Politics’, while the second issue, edited by Grace Bolton and Sarah Steele, addresses ‘Secession, Sovereignty, and the Quest for Legitimacy’. Reaffirming STAIR’s founding principles, both issues include contributions by leading academics as well as emerging scholars. To mark the publication of each issue, STAIR hosted themed panels, featuring both academics and policymakers, at Blackwell’s Bookshop in Oxford. STAIR, though led by Managing Directors Henning Tamm (2009–10) and Nicole De Silva (2010–11), continued to be a group effort, with David Blagden, Martin Deleixhe, Evert Faber van der Meulen, Adam Freeman, Nina Hall, Justin Hempson-Jones, Ryan Lang, Sophia Mann, Laurence McGivern, Jane Park, Andrea Rüdiger, Katri Saarenheimo, Nora Stappert, Sitara Thobani and Linda Van der Horst standing out as major contributors.

Finally, it falls to me to thank our beloved College Administration on behalf of many appreciative students at St Antony’s. As usual, the support from college staff at all levels has been indispensable to the work of our students. We are appreciative, as always, of our Warden’s willingness to get involved in student initiatives, as well as her unfailing enthusiasm and support for our projects. I also thank Penny Cooke for her dedication and availability to students. The Bursar Allan Taylor and Domestic Bursar Peter Robinson must be thanked for their responsiveness to student concerns throughout the entire year and for working with the GCR on a new and very satisfactory financial agreement. College Registrar Margaret Couling must also be thanked for her dedication to maintaining a welcoming environment in college, and in particular for taking the lead on offering Peer Support Training for our students. Karin Leighton has been busy as usual accommodating all of our housing needs and must be commended for her energy in doing so. Likewise, Rachael Connelly and Gillian Crook have been busy since before the beginning of term responding to students’ needs and concerns, dealing with anything from academic to social issues year round, always with a smile. The Development Office, in particular Emma Tracy and Ranj Majumdar, has been truly fantastic this year in both facilitating and funding student’s events and I hope this newly invigorated relationship will last in the years to come. IT Manager Christopher Hoskin and Librarian Rosamund Campbell must also be commended for their hard work in ensuring that our students have access to all the academic resources they will need during their time at St Antony’s. Thanks must also go to the Steward and the entire dining hall staff for their tasty food and perennially cheerful dispositions, as well as to the cleaning staff for maintaining our accommodation and buildings spotlessly. Last but not least, I would like to thank each and every porter for their helpfulness and enthusiasm towards students, whether at six in the morning or eleven at night. These words are surely not enough to express our gratitude to all of the above, but may they be recorded nonetheless. Here’s to an equally successful and plentiful upcoming year!

THE LIBRARY

The College Library, comprising the Main Library and the libraries of the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre and of the Middle East Centre, contains over 100,000 volumes, the collections reflecting the major disciplinary interests of the college. In addition to these resources, we also have on the college site the University libraries of the Latin American Centre and the Bodleian Japanese Library.

The Main Library reading rooms occupy what were formerly the chapel, refectory and chapter house of the first Anglican convent, the Society of the Holy and Undivided Trinity. It holds the general collections in modern history, politics, international relations, economics and development studies, and the regional collections on Europe and Asia. The western language collections on Russia and the former USSR are also in the Main Library, while the Slavonic language material on these areas and the Eastern European countries are in the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre library.

Archival holdings at the college include an extensive collection at the Middle East Centre of private papers and photographs from diplomats, businessmen and others who worked or travelled in the Middle East. The Main Library's archives include a number of collections of private papers relating to 20th century Europe, of particular importance being those of Sir John Wheeler-Bennett.

While the primary aim of the College Library as a whole is to serve the needs of members of the college, the area studies centres fulfil a wider role in providing facilities to all members of the University whose studies come within their orbit; they also, under certain conditions, admit other scholars. The Main Library also admits a number of researchers from outside the college to use its unique material, in particular those on the Third Reich and fascist Italy.

Mrs Margaret Sarosi joined us in January to continue the work on our retrospective cataloguing project.

AFRICAN STUDIES
The African Studies Centre

Governing Body Fellows

DR DAVID PRATTEN, University Lecturer in the Social Anthropology of Africa and Atiku Abubakar Fellow in African Studies. During the year he became Director of the African Studies Centre and oversaw the centre’s move to new offices at 13 Bevington Road. He also became co-editor of AFRICA: Journal of the International African Institute which is the leading journal specialising in African anthropology. He presented papers about his work on youth and violence in Nigeria at the ASA in New Orleans, and at the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford. He published a paper on Nigerian vigilantism and continues to work on several projects relating to youth in Africa. He was awarded a university teaching excellence award, and in February he was honoured to be presented to Her Majesty the Queen at a reception held at Buckingham Palace to mark the state visit of President Zuma of South Africa.

The Centre for the Study of African Economies

The Centre for the Study of African Economies (CSAE) is located partly with the University Department of Economics and partly in St Antony’s College, at 21 Winchester Road, Oxford. Its mission is to apply modern research methods to improve economic and social conditions for the poorest societies in the world. Research is both microeconomic, with a focus on the problems facing individual producers (farms and firms) in Africa, and macroeconomic. It ranges from studies on the assets and economic performance of agricultural market traders in Benin and Malawi, to the determinants of inflation in South Africa and how the government and central bank can best reduce it.

The centre not only conducts research but also trains doctoral students. Former students are now employed in African universities and research institutions, as well as in African Central Banks, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Results of the centre’s research are disseminated both in Africa and internationally. CSAE is home to the Journal of African Economies, which is widely circulated in Africa and which funds the annual JAE Fellowship programme. This programme enables three African academics to spend a term at the CSAE. Centre staff participate in a wide range of activities within Africa, including data collection for both households and firms, and training and discussion with both the business and policy-making communities. The centre collaborates closely with such organisations as the African Economic Research Consortium, the Economic Commission for Africa, and the African Development Bank. Together with these organisations, CSAE is building a body of informed opinion on economic policy within the continent. The centre has a strong research reputation, which provides the basis for its increasing involvement in policy debates and other assistance to African governments and international organisations and the CSAE annual conference is an internationally renowned event for economists. The next conference will be held 20–23 March 2011.
The CSAE is currently leading a major DFID funded Research Programme Consortium, ‘Improving institutions for pro-poor growth in Africa and South Asia’ with partners in Uganda, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Kenya, Bangladesh and India. South Asia and sub-Saharan Africa represent the two great challenges as regards meeting the Millennium Development Goal of halving global poverty by 2015 and there is growing evidence that the impediments to generating pro-poor growth in these two regions are institutional in nature. Social, legal, economic and political institutions powerfully affect the pattern of investment and growth and the extent to which the poor participate in that growth. The iiG website is at www.iig.ox.ac.uk.

The CSAE is also a partner in a second Research Programme Consortium, RECOUP, studying the outcomes of education for pro-poor development. The research agenda comprises work on the effect of education on three broad sets of outcomes. The first is related to the social consequences of education which includes health, fertility and subjective well-being. The second is economic outcomes which comprise not simply the earnings individuals obtain from education but how it affects their chances of getting a job and the type of job that they can obtain. Finally, RECOUP will be investigating the outcomes of alternative methods of funding education.

The CSAE has been awarded funding from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation to run a programme ‘Transforming economic policies towards the poor’. This has enabled the recruitment of research officers and a communications officer as well as supporting a number of initiatives, in particular the ‘Africa Means Business’ project, designed to build cross continent communications capacity in the media, financial and business sectors.

The CSAE has continued its data collection work in Africa. In recent years the range of surveys undertaken by the centre has been extended to include survey work on NGOs and coffee farmers in Uganda, panel labour market surveys in both Tanzania and Ghana, and surveys of Ghanaian cocoa farmers. The panel labour market surveys in Ghana and Tanzania are designed to capture movement between jobs so that the sources of lifetime earnings can be measured. The household data collection in Ethiopia is a panel that, for a subset of the sample, can trace households over the period from 1989 to 2004. It provides a unique, long-term panel data set to analyse the changes in socio-economic conditions and welfare over the last 15 years, and has informed rural development policy advice to the Ethiopian Government and international agencies. The work on Ghana cocoa farms is one of the first panel data sets on farmers in Africa that allows investigation of issues of the impact of liberalisation, the effects of migration and the determinants of labour and land productivities across the size range of farms.

The centre produces a Working Paper Series, operates a programme of lunch-time seminars on Tuesdays and Wednesdays during term, and runs workshops and conferences. We also publish an annual research summary which is available on our website and CSAE staff are available to discuss their work by phone or by email.
For further information about the CSAE including details of all research programmes, key datasets and staff contact details, please see our website at www.csae.ox.ac.uk. For general enquiries please telephone +44 (0)1865 271 084 or email csae.enquiries@economics.ox.ac.uk

ASIAN STUDIES

The Asian Studies Centre

Dr Rachel Murphy, University Lecturer in the Sociology of China, continued as the Director of the centre. The centre welcomed Dr Faisal Devji, University Reader in Modern South Asian History, to St Antony’s and onto the ASC Management Committee. After nearly ten years of efficiently looking after the administration of the centre, Jenny Griffiths retired in June. She kindly returned for two weeks at the start of Michaelmas term to welcome, and help settle in, the new Centre Administrator, Ms Kirsty Norton.

The Wai Seng Senior Research Scholarship was advertised in Michaelmas term; it is tenable at St Antony’s with effect from Michaelmas term 2010. A total of 17 candidates applied, the highest number since the scholarship was first offered, and the pool of applicants was exceptionally strong. The scholarship was awarded to Ms Maria Repnikova, a politics student at St Antony’s. Her dissertation examines journalists in China and Russia.

In Michaelmas term Dr Rachel Murphy and Dr Steve Tsang co-organised a seminar series entitled ‘Studies of the Chinese speaking world’. The first seminar was given by Mr Bau Pu. Mr Bau is one of the translators and editors of Prisoner of the State: The Secret Journal of Premier Zhao Ziyang. He spoke on ‘Insights into high politics: the secret journal of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang’. Other speakers and topics included Professor Inderjit Singh (National War College and Senior Associate Member at St Antony’s) ‘Can India ever catch up with China?’; Professor Carol Jones (University of Wolverhampton) ‘Law in the Cold War: internal security in Hong Kong 1950–1971’; Dr Wei Zhang (University of Cambridge) ‘Prisoner of the State: How did Zhao Ziyang change to a democratic socialist from a communist’; Dr Jeremy Taylor (University of Sheffield) ‘The Hokkien Frontline: The Amoy-dialect film industry in the context of China’s Cold War’; Professor Shujie Yao (University of Nottingham) ‘New economic theory of financial crisis and economic recovery in China’; Professor Charles Stafford (LSE) ‘The punishment of ethical behaviour: a case study from Taiwan’.

In Hilary term Professor Rosemary Foot arranged a special seminar given by Professor Baogang He (Chair in International Studies at The School of Politics and International Studies, Deakin University Melbourne Australia), who spoke on ‘Authoritarian deliberation: the deliberative turn in Chinese political development’. In Hilary term Dr Rachel Murphy arranged for two Chinese films to be shown in the Nissan Lecture Theatre: The King of Masks directed by Wu Tian Ming and Going to School with Father in my Back directed by Chow Yau Chiu.

In the Trinity term Professor Rosemary Foot organised a special seminar given by Professor Don Emmerson (Stanford University), who spoke on ‘Much ado about not much? Asian regionalism today’. Dr Jenny Corbett convened a special lunch time seminar in week seven, given by Ms Xu Ying, a PhD candidate at the Australian National University, on ‘Foreign entry and its impact on China’s banking performance: some new evidence’.
This academic year Mr P J Thum, a DPhil Student in Modern History (Hertford College) convened the Southeast Asian Studies Seminar Series. In Michaelmas term a total of three talks were held. These were Ms Krisna Uk (University of Cambridge) ‘Living amidst remnants of war in Southeast Asia’; Dr Mulaika Hijjas (SOAS) ‘Heresies and housewives: didactic literature for woman in the Malay manuscript tradition’; and Dr Graham K Brown (University of Bath) ‘The ethnic leviathan: public discourse and private violence in Malaysia’. In Hilary term the following talks were held: Jeni Whalan (DPhil Student in International Relations and the Wai Seng Senior Research Scholar, St Antony’s) ‘The power of local legitimacy: UN peace operations in Cambodia 1992–93’; Dr Phyllis Ferguson (United Nations Development Programme) ‘Post-conflict East Timor: freedom – but what about rights, justice and development?’; Dr Felicia Hughes-Freeland (University of Swansea) ‘Women’s impacts on cinema in post-Suharto Indonesia: beyond the “victim-virago dichotomy”’; Professor Duncan McCargo (University of Leeds) ‘The Khmer Rouge tribunal: some preliminary reflections’. In Trinity term there was one seminar: Dr Abdul Razak Baginda (Senior Associate Member at St Antony’s) spoke on ‘Malaysia: between politics and religion’.

The regular weekly South Asian History Seminar Series (previously The South Asian Studies Seminar Series) was convened by Dr Faisal Devji (University Reader in Modern South Asian History at St Antony’s).

In Hilary term the speakers and topics were: Dr Sunil Kumar (SOAS) ‘Courts, capitals and kingship: Delhi and its sultans in the 13th and 14th centuries’; Professor Christopher Shackle (SOAS) ‘The times of 19th century Punjabi Sufi poetry’; Professor Rachel Dwyer (SOAS) ‘Happy ever after: Hindi films and the happy ending’; Professor Sumantra Bose (LSE) ‘The end of an insurgency: lessons from Sri Lanka’; Professor Sir Christopher Bayly (University of Cambridge) ‘Indian liberalism: rights, constitutions and Empire’. In week 8 Dr Faisal Devji co-organised a joint, lunchtime seminar, with the Middle East Centre. This talk, called ‘Losing Kandahar, 1968–2010’, was given by Alex Strick van Linschoten and Felix Kuehn who are the authors of My life with the Taliban.

In Trinity term the speakers and topics for the South Asian History Seminar Series were Dr Joya Chatterjee (University of Cambridge) ‘The disinherit: citizenship regimes in South Asia, 1946–67’; Dr Nasser Hussain (Amherst College) ‘Pakistan’s small wars’; Dr Farzana Shaikh (Royal Institute of International Affairs) ‘Identity, ethnicity and democracy: the case of Pakistan’; Dr Ritu Birla (University of Toronto) ‘Between vernacular capitalisms and the logic of capital: law, economy and historical translation’; Professor Saurabh Dube (Centre for Asian and African Studies, El Colegio de Mexico)

As part of the South Asian History Seminar Series in week three Dr Faisal Devji also convened a special talk given by Professor Peter van der Veer (Max Planck Institute for the Study of Religious and ethnic Diversity at Gottingen) on ‘The value of comparison: looking at India and China comparatively’. This proved popular with both India and China specialists.

In addition to the seminar series, this academic year the Asian Studies Centre continued to both wholly and partially sponsor several well-attended workshops. As can be seen from the descriptions below, our South Asian Studies colleagues were particularly active in arranging these events for this year. In Michaelmas term, Dr Devji and Professor Richard Sorabji (Wolfson College) co-organised a two-day workshop, titled ‘Moral and political ideas of Mahatma Gandhi on the 140th anniversary of his birth’. The first day of this event was held at Wolfson College and the second day was held at St Antony’s. The speakers and topics were: Dr Faisal Devji (St Antony’s) ‘Gandhi: morality in the shadow of politics’; Professor Richard Sorabji (Honorary Fellow, Wolfson College and Faculty of Philosophy) ‘Gandhi & the Stoics: squaring emotional detachment with universal love and political objectives’; Professor Kanti Bajpai (Wolfson College) ‘Gandhian thought and its implications for international relations: some initial thoughts’; Professor Mohamed Mehdi (Oakton Community College) ‘Political action and cosmopolitanism in Gandhi and Seneca’; Professor Uday Mehta (Amherst College) ‘Gandhi: war, violence and the logic of inevitability’.

In Hilary term Dr Faisal Devji and Dr James McDougall (History, Oxford) co-organised a one-day workshop on ‘Migrants in and after empire: India, Africa, and the Middle East’. The first speaker, Dr Andrew Arsan (Cambridge University) spoke on ‘An unrooted nation: the strange career of Ibrahim Tham, a Lebanese bookseller in Dakar’, followed by talks given by Dr Gerald McCann (University of Oxford) ‘A “missed opportunity”? After a well-deserved tea break the workshop moved from the Dahrendorf Room across to the Nissan Lecture Theatre where HE Talmiz Ahmad, Ambassador of the Republic of India to the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia gave his key note talk on ‘Indian migration to the Gulf: 1970–2010’.

The final event held in Trinity term at St Antony’s was a one-day workshop convened by Professor Polly O’Hanlon on ‘From the medieval to the early modern: sources, concepts, methodologies’. The opening remarks were given by Dr Aparna Kapadia (Mellon Postdoctoral Fellow, St Antony’s). The speakers and topics were as follows: Dr Nandita Sahai (Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi) ‘Courting court records: Sunars and...

The Taiwan Studies Programme

The programme for the past academic year has continued as an important component of the Asian Studies Centre under the directorship of Dr Steve Tsang. As usual there has been a busy schedule of activities.

The Michaelmas term seminar was given by Professor Thomas J Christensen, Professor of Politics and International Affairs and Director of the Princeton-Harvard China and the World Programme at Princeton University. Professor Christenson spoke on the subject of ‘Cross-Strait relations and US policy toward Taiwan and mainland China’. The programme also sponsored a panel on Taiwan at the international conference ‘Backward toward revolution’ at the University of Toronto in October. At this panel, Professor Shelley Rigger (Davidson College) spoke on ‘Taiwan, nationalism and democratisation’; Professor Jean-Pierre Cabestan (Hong Kong Baptist University) presented a paper on ‘Cross-Taiwan Strait relations’; Dr Steve Tsang (Oxford University) took on the subject of ‘A peacefully rising China and dilemma in Taiwan’s security’; and Professor Vincent Wang (University of Richmond) addressed the conference on ‘The role of democracy in cross-Strait relations’.

At the start of Hilary term, two Taiwanese films were shown. The first was Grandma’s Hairpin, directed by Hsiao Chu-chen, and the second Let it be, co-directed by Yen Lanchuan and Juang Yi-tseng. Two seminars took place in Hilary term. The first given by Dr Jason Hu, Mayor of Tai-chung City in Taiwan; his talk was titled ‘To grow a city with creativity: the Tai-chung experience’. The second seminar was given by Kenny Golden, a former US Navy Captain, a candidate for the US Congress and a former Visiting Fellow at St Antony’s, on the subject of ‘China and the US in the near parity: implications for Taiwan and the world’.

Trinity term was a busy term for the programme, with two seminars and a two-day international conference. Dr Ming-yeh Rawnsley, Research Fellow at the Institute of Communications Studies, University of Leeds came to give a seminar on ‘New generation, young culture; a talk based on five short films’. The second seminar, titled ‘Cross-strait talks – what the future holds’, was given by Dr Chi Su, Secretary General of the National Security Council from 2008–2010.
The two-day conference, titled ‘The vitality of Taiwan’ was organised by Dr Steve Tsang, and took place at the end of Trinity term. Speakers from across the globe came to present papers, act as discussants and chair the sessions. On day one Professor Shelly Rigger (Davidson College, North Carolina) presented her paper on ‘Resilience and dynamism of Taiwan’s democratic system’; Professor Scott Kastner (University of Maryland), ‘Cross-strait tension as a force for change and innovation’; Professor Gunter Schubert (University of Tubingen, Germany), ‘People as a force for social and political change’; Professor Dung-sheng Chen (National Taiwan University), ‘People as a force for economic dynamism and changes’; Professor Michael Hsiao (Academia Sinica), ‘NGOs and civil society as instrument for dynamism of society’. On day two, Professor Joseph Wong (University of Toronto) presented his paper on ‘Approach to innovations, research and development’; Professor Gary Rawnsley (University of Leeds) and Dr Sarah Gong Qian (Research Associate, University of Sheffield) gave a joint presentation of their paper ‘Vitality of the media’; Dr Mark Harrison (University of Tasmania) spoke on ‘How films and the performing arts affect life in Taiwan’. The final session was given by Dr Pei-Yin Lin (University of Cambridge) presenting her paper ‘How fiction and modern literature change Taiwan’.

During the summer break, the programme will sponsor a Taiwan panel at a conference on civil society to be held at Merton College, and join the Hoover Institution in organising a workshop on ‘Rising from the ashes: Chiang Kai-shek’s recreation of the Republic of China in Taiwan’ to be held at the Hoover Institution, Stanford University.
The Nissan Institute of Japanese Studies

The Nissan Institute based in St Antony’s College now has a history of 30 years and has established itself as the leading centre for Japanese studies in the UK, if not Europe. Our library holdings of Japanese language material, curated by Mrs I Tytler, are the most extensive in Europe, our master’s programmes have established themselves as the best of their kind, attracting applicants from all over the world (including Japan), and our monograph series thrives. Our former director and founding Nissan Professor, Arthur Stockwin having already received honours from both the British and Japanese governments was in 2009 awarded the Japan Foundation prize for his contribution to Japanese studies in the UK and his promotion of intellectual exchange with Japan. Although now retired, Arthur continues to chair the editorial board of the Nissan Institute/Routledge Japanese Studies series which in the course of the last year published five new books (see below).

2008–9 was designated Japan–UK 150 and a number of events were organised to celebrate 150 years of amity between our two countries. We decided to take this as the organising theme for our seminar series in Michaelmas term. Although not part of our original plan, the seminar series got off to an excellent start thanks to the offer of a lecture by Eda Satsuki, currently President of the House of Councillors. He studied in Oxford in the late 1960s at Linacre College and the Department of Law and it was clear from his presentation that it had left a deep impression that continues to inform his activities within contemporary Japanese politics.

We invited two papers from colleagues that focused on the connections between Oxford University and Japan. Izumi Tytler and Antoni Ucerler gave an illustrated presentation showing some examples of the collection of pre-modern publications that are held in the Bodleian library. Brian Powell gave an overview of the direct links that were established between a modernising Japan and a modernising Oxford University from the 1870s onwards which finished with a description of the development of Japanese studies here since the mid-1950s. Presentations by Kikuchi Yuko on ‘Trans/national legacy of the Mingei Movement’ and Princess Akiko of Mikasa on ‘A textbook of Japanese ceramics in Victorian Britain’ demonstrated the inter-relationship between Japanese and British art and culture over the last century and a half.

Finally, we were fortunate to have two presentations that examined the diplomatic relationship present and past. At the end of November H E Shin Ebihara visited Oxford. After discussions with the Vice-Chancellor and a visit to the Ashmolean museum, the ambassador provided us with a wide-ranging account of the recent developments in the political and economic links between our two countries. Finally, Sir Sydney Giffard, on the last Friday of term began his paper reminding us that he first arrived at the British embassy in Tokyo ‘only days after the king died’. Later in his career he became ambassador to Japan in the 1980s. His personal observations on Japan thus encompassed almost 60 years. Michaelmas term ended with a performance of Noh theatre in Keble College organised by Brian Powell which was followed by a seminar on contemporary Noh theatre by the director Richard Emmet.
As the list of seminars demonstrates we had an impressive series of guests giving papers over both Hilary and Trinity terms but I would like to mention in particular papers from Kenneth Pyle, and Beate Sirota in March.

Last year I reported on the production of our first newsletter about Japanese studies at Oxford University. A second edition was produced this year as well as a brochure about the Nissan Institute which sketches out the background to its foundation and describes its present structure and activities. Readers who would like to know more about the content of either of these can find them on our website: www.nissan.ox.ac.uk/alumni

Seminars

During the year five books were published in the Nissan Institute/Routledge Japanese Studies Series: David Arase and Tsuneo Akaha (eds), The US–Japan Alliance: Balancing

Miss Jane Baker remains the Institute Secretary, and Mrs Izumi Tytler continues as Librarian of the Bodleian Japanese Library. Ms Kaori Nishizawa is the Nissan Instructor of Japanese.

Governing Body Fellows

DR JENNY CORBETT, Faculty Fellow and Reader in the Economy of Japan, is a specialist on the Japanese economy. Her research covers current macro-economic policy as well as banking and finance in Japan. She continues to divide her time between the Australian National University and the college, spending Trinity terms in Oxford. In Australia she is Executive Director of the Australia-Japan Research Centre which carries out research on Australia-Japan economic relations and their strategic interests in the Asia Pacific region. She led a research team in 2008 using micro-economic data to look at regional integration in services, trade facilitation and investment climate within the East Asia Summit group of countries. This resulted in the volume, Jenny Corbett and So Umezaki (eds), Deepening East Asian Economic Integration, Jakarta: ERIA, 2009 (www.eria.org/research/y2008-no1.html). Research collaboration between the AJRC at ANU and the Japan Institute for Labour Policy and Training resulted in an edited volume Jenny Corbett, Anne Daly, Hisa Matsushige and Dehne Taylor, Laggards and Leaders in Labour Market Reform: Comparing Japan and Australia, London: Routledge, 2009. Dr Corbett continues as a Research Fellow of the Centre for Economic Policy Research (London) and a Research Associate of the Center on Japanese Economy and Business at Columbia University (New York).

DR FAISAL DEVJI, University Reader in Modern South Asian History, has in the past year published scholarly articles in journals like Modern Intellectual History, Transit and New Literary History, alongside essays in volumes by Oxford, Routledge and Sage. He also writes opinion pieces in The Guardian. During the year Dr Devji has been interviewed in TIME, Die Zeit, Outlook India and La Vanguardia, and appeared on BBC Radio 4’s ‘In Our Time’, National Public Radio in the US, and on the Austrian Broadcasting Corporation. He delivered keynote addresses at the Centre for Contemporary Culture in Barcelona and the Institute for Human Sciences in Vienna, as well as speaking at various forums in Oxford, the Wissenschaftskolleg in Berlin, UCL, SOAS and Goldsmiths in London, the University of Edinburgh and the University of Amsterdam. Dr Devji organised a set of two conferences to mark the centenary of Gandhi’s book Hind Swaraj, one at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg, and the other at an event sponsored by PUKAR and Jnanapravaha in Mumbai. He is working on two books, one called The Impossible Indian: Gandhi’s Politics of Nonviolence, and the other Muslim Zion: Jinnah and the Making of Pakistan.

DR NANDINI GOOPTU, Faculty Fellow and University Reader in South Asian Studies, is the Senior Tutor of the St Antony’s College. Her major research project, at present, is on the social and political consequences of economic liberalisation and globalisation in India, in particular the transformation of the experience of work, the rise of an enterprise culture, new forms of youth identity, and their impact on urban social relations, political ideologies and democratic politics. In addition, she continues to work on the long term history of poverty and urban politics, based on which she gave the keynote lecture, entitled ‘In the name of the poor: poverty and politics in India in a comparative perspective’, at the European Social Science History Conference, Ghent, April 2010. She also offered a paper on poverty in a historical perspective at a British Academy sponsored workshop, held at the Annual Conference of the British Association of South Asian Studies, Warwick, March 2010.

DR EKATERINA HERTOG, Career Development Fellow in Sociology of Japanese Society and, began her first term in St Antony’s in Michaelmas 2008 and for most of the last academic year has been on maternity leave. Her son Alexander was born in December. We look forward to seeing them back in Oxford in September 2010. While she was away she was awarded the 2009 Daiwa Prize for ‘the best article by an early career scholar’ in Japan Forum for her recent work ‘The worst abuse against a child is the absence of a parent: how Japanese unwed mothers evaluate their decision to have a child outside of wedlock’.

PROFESSOR TAKEHIKO KARIYA, Faculty Fellow and Professor in the Sociology of Japanese Society. This was his first year of full-year based appointment at Oxford after 18 years professorship at University of Tokyo. In 2010, he published three co-edited

DR SHO KONISHI, Faculty Fellow and University Lecturer in the Modern History of Japan, received research grants from both the British Academy and the John Fell Fund for archival research on his book project on the emergence of non-governmental movements and philanthropic practices in Japan since the late 18th century. The project traces networks of physicians, their conceptions of the dead body and moral ideologies, and their practices in pre-revolutionary late-18th century Japan. The project led him from the southernmost gate of Nagasaki to the northernmost island of Hokkaido in search of archival evidence. He is currently completing an article based on his findings from these trips. He also completed his book manuscript, a Russian-Japanese transnational intellectual history of anarchism, in the Michaelmas term, and another article, ‘Language without culture’, on the sudden emergence of a popular translingual movement in Japan in 1906. A third article, on the history of the Russian Orthodox mission in Japan, is nearing completion. He initiated a new Modern Japanese History Workshop funded by the History Faculty. On the teaching and administrative fronts, he played various roles for the Nissan Institute, the History Faculty and the Oriental Institute in both the Humanities and Social Sciences Divisions. As Chair of Examiners, he contributed to making his colleagues’ lives even more complex.

DR RACHEL MURPHY, Faculty Fellow and University Lecturer in the Sociology of China. This year Rachel was involved in developing new core courses and serving as Chair of Examiners for the MSc in Modern Chinese Studies. In February she presented at Nottingham University’s China Seminar Series on communication technologies in rural areas. She also worked with Professor Hans Van de Ven (Cambridge) and Ms Sharon Strange (International Relations Asia Section, British Academy) in organising a British Academy-ESRC PhD and Early Career Researchers Workshop held in 19–20 March in Cambridge. For this Rachel convened a panel on population and diversity which brought together 11 early career researchers from China and ten scholars from UK and Europe.
Over the year she continued with her British Academy funded project on children who stay behind in the Chinese countryside after the outmigration of their parents to the cities. June was spent in rural Jiangxi interviewing children, guardians and teachers – a highlight was visiting one school situated in beautiful mountains and reached by boat. The following was published: Mingxing Liu, Wang Juan, Ran Tao and Rachel Murphy (2009) ‘The political economy of earmarked transfers in a state-designated poor county in western China’, China Quarterly (December): pp973–774.

PROFESSOR IAN NEARY’s biography of Matsumoto Jiichiro was finally published at the end of 2009 and launched at a reception organised at the Daiwa Foundation on 27 January 2010. Meanwhile he has started on a new research project on human rights and the Dowa project. He presented a paper on this topic to a conference at Seoul University on the ‘Localisation of human rights in East Asia’ in November 2009. Since then he has presented different versions of that paper to seminars in several Japanese universities (Waseda, ICU and Aoyama Gakuin) and to a conference organised by the Human Rights Centre at Essex University, where he is an Honorary Fellow. He will continue for the next year at least as Director of the institute, but Professor Takehiko Kariya will take over as director of the masters’ degree programmes from September this year. Meanwhile he has accepted invitations to become a member of the UK–Japan 21st Century Group and the chair of the Japan Foundation Endowment Committee (JFEC). The UK–Japan 21st Century Group is a non-governmental forum that brings together politicians, businessmen, scholars and others with an interest in developing UK–Japan relations. It was founded by Prime Ministers Margaret Thatcher and Yasuhiro Nakasone in 1984. The JFEC provides small grants to support research in the academic field of Japanese Studies within degree-awarding institutions in the United Kingdom.

DR MARCUS REBICK, Faculty Fellow and Nissan Lecturer in the Economy of Japan, has been doing research on the gender pay gap in Japan and has contributed a book chapter on this subject to an edited volume coming out from Trans-Pacific Press later this year. He is interested in cross-national comparisons with other East Asian countries.

PROFESSOR VIVIENNE SHUE presented last summer a keynote paper on contemporary Chinese ‘thrift shops’ to a conference on charity and urban public services in China held at Turku University. She later revised the paper and used it as the basis for a lecture delivered at Royal Holloway University entitled ‘Small mercies: poverty/charity, state-market, and the provision of social welfare in urban China’ (podcast available at http://backdoorbroadcasting.net ). She delivered a lecture on ‘God and Caesar in China’ as part of the college’s Visiting Parliamentary Fellows Seminar in March; a lecture on ‘Episodes of “Anti-Confucianism” and estimates of “human capital”’ (about female education, labour force participation, and the pattern of Chinese economic development) at a conference on ‘The Role of China’s Past in China’s Present’ held during the spring at Merton College; and served as chair and discussant at an international conference convened at Merton earlier in the year, on ‘Consumerism in China’. She chaired a panel featuring new research on rural society and politics in China at the Association for Asian Studies annual convention in Philadelphia; continued her service on the British Academy’s China Panel and as a member of the executive committee of the China Quarterly’s editorial board. She served as an invited external assessor also on some key senior faculty and research appointments being made in Chinese studies at other universities, including Harvard, the ANU, and Sciences-Po.

Emeritus Fellow

PROFESSOR TAPAN RAYCHAUDHURI delivered the Convocation Address for 2009 at the Calcutta University.

He spoke on ‘Hindus and Muslims in British India’ at the invitation of the Asiatic Society of Bangladesh, Dhaka. The lecture was published in the society’s journal. His collected essays in Bengali were published by Ananda Publishers. His memoirs in English, Memoirs of a Bengali Yokel, have been accepted for publication by Harper-Collins (India) and are expected to be in print next winter.

PROFESSOR J A A STOCKWIN, Emeritus Fellow, was excited by the election of a brand-new Japanese government. In September he gave an OU Alumni Lecture asking ‘Why has Japan not had a female Prime Minister?’. In October he received in Tokyo a Japan Foundation Prize for Japanese Studies and Intellectual Exchange, and lectured on ‘Japanese politics in a British political mirror’. He also spoke at the Universities of Reading and Bristol on Japan’s new government. In November he lectured in Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide on: ‘Political earthquake in Japan: how much difference will it make?’. In February–March 2010 he was at Gakushūin University in Tokyo researching the new government with colleagues, and presented a seminar comparing British and Japanese politics. In March he gave a Japan Foundation lecture in London entitled ‘New Japanese politics from a British perspective’. In May he lectured to Hōsei University students in Tokyo by video-link from London asking: ‘What lessons do the recent British general elections hold for the future politics of Japan?’. During the year he examined doctoral theses from the Universities of Oxford, Birmingham and Adelaide, and again helped select candidates for the Daiwa Foundation scholarships.

DR ANN WASWO, Emeritus Fellow, chaired a workshop on ‘Machines that changed their worlds: the social history of the sewing machine and the bicycle in Britain and Japan’ in early July and then turned to completing her Oxford novel. She describes the latter as ‘a lament about the dire effects of recent state policies on academics and academic inquiry in the UK, in a crime fiction wrapper’. The two deaths of persons connected to Thaddeus Hall, Oxford have now been solved by the Thames Valley Police, with some assistance from Akiko Sugiymama, a visitor from Tokyo. All loose ends tied up. Now on to finding a publisher!
Research Fellow

DR CLARINDA STILL is an anthropologist lecturing in Modern Indian Studies for the MSc in Contemporary India in the School of Interdisciplinary Area Studies. She holds a Junior Research Fellow at St Antony's and is a Research Associate in Anthropology. She has conducted ethnographic research among Dalits in South India. Clarinda gave birth to a baby boy on 2 April. She is on maternity leave from January–December 2009 but is acting as Director of Graduate Studies for the MSc in the Michaelmas term 2010. Having received a generous grant from the Oxford University John Fell Fund, she hosted an international conference on 1 and 2 September entitled ‘Mobility or marginalisation? Dalits in neoliberal India’, which welcomed scholars from Australia, India, Italy, Holland, Germany and Scotland. The proceedings of the conference will be published in an edited volume in 2011–12. Her article, ‘Spoiled brides and the fear of education: honour and social mobility among Dalits in South India’ was published in Modern Asian Studies in September 2010. The manuscript of her forthcoming book The Imperatives of Honour: Dalit Women and Cultural Transformation in South India has been submitted to the publishers and is due to be published by Social Science Press next year.
The European Studies Centre enjoyed a busy academic year as always. We benefited from the presence of six Visiting Fellows on fellowships both old and new, who contributed substantially to the energy and variety of our activities: Dr Maria Elena Iñarra García (Basque), Dr Bastien Hirondelle (Deakin), Professor Simone Lässig (Stifterverband), Dr Julio Crespo MacLennan (Santander), Professor Paolo Morlini (Monte dei Paschi di Siena) and Jonathan Scheele (EU). The permanent members of the centre are Jane Caplan (Director), Othon Anastasakis, Timothy Garton Ash, Knick Harley, Paola Mattei, Kalypso Nicolaidis and Jan Zielonka. The centre warmly welcomed Paola Mattei, University Lecturer in Comparative Social Policy, who was elected to a Governing Body Fellowship at the college and joined the centre in April. Conversely, we bid a sad farewell to Knick Harley, who retired as Professor of Economic History this year, but will happily also welcome him back for part of next year.

Among our schedule of annual events, the centre’s Annual Lecture was given in Trinity term by Professor Dr Jürgen Kocka, Emeritus Professor at the Free University of Berlin and Visiting Stifterverband Fellow at St Antony’s 2004/5, on the topic of ‘Writing capitalism into history. Markets, crises and the challenge of reconstruction since the 19th century’; and in Hilary term the Annual Fondazione Monte dei Paschi di Siena Lecture was given by Dottore Paolo Garimberti, President of RAI TV, on ‘Media challenges today and the future of journalism: the view from Italy’. Trinity term also saw the Chancellor’s Seminar, with the Patron of the Centre, Lord Patten of Barnes, in conversation with Lord Hannay and Sir Stephen Wall on ‘British EU policy after the election’.

In Michaelmas term the centre held its Core Seminar, which this year took the form of a collaboration with the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre on the theme of ‘Twenty Years since 1989’. The two centres jointly mounted a series of weekly seminars by experts in the history and politics of the Soviet Union, Russia and eastern Europe, featuring talks by Alex Pravda (RESC), Timothy Garton Ash (ESC) in conversation with Janusz Onyskiewicz (spokesman for ‘Solidarity’ in the 1980s) and Sir Adam Roberts (Oxford), Alan Smith (UCL–SEES), Dennis Deletant (UCL–SEES), Norman Davies (Honorary Fellow, St Antony’s), Mark Pittaway (Open University) and Anatol Lieven (KCL). The ESC ran a concurrent series of more informal seminars and discussions looking at the history and legacy of 1989 more widely in Europe and the world; participants included James Elles (MEP), Quentin Peel (Financial Times), Chris Bickerton (Oxford), Simone Lässig (Stifterverband VF), Aribert Reimann (Oxford), Mary Kaldor (LSE), Richard Caplan (Oxford), George Lawson (LSE) and Karl Gerth (Oxford). A further seminar organised by Kalypso Nicolaïdis (ESC) brought Joseph Weiler (NYU) into conversation with Pavlos Eleftheriadis (Oxford) on the topic of ‘Values and virtues in Europe’.
In Hilary term the centre hosted two faculty seminars: the regular European Economic and Social History Seminar convened on behalf of the Departments of Economics and History by Knick Harley, and a new international history seminar, ‘Writing Europe in the world, 1900 to the present’, convened for the Departments of Politics and History by Jane Caplan (ESC), Anne Deighton (DPIR; SAM) and Patricia Clavin (History), which we hope will become an annual fixture. Jan Zielonka, Ralf Dahrendorf Fellow in European Politics (ESC), organised a conference on ‘Public service broadcasting as a vehicle for democracy’ within the scope of his new international project on ‘Media and Democracy in Central and Eastern Europe’ (see also below). Hilary term also saw the majority of the events organised by the centre’s Visiting Fellows. Bastien Irodelle (Deakin VF) organised a workshop in collaboration with the DPIR, Chris Bickerton (Oxford) and Anand Menon (University of Birmingham) on the subject of ‘The European Union in international security’. Jonathan Scheele (EU VF) organised a workshop on ‘The EU and its Eastern neighbours – what kind of partnership?’, in collaboration with the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre and with colleagues John Beyer (Oxford) and Graham Avery (Oxford). Elena Iñarra (Basque VF) organised a workshop on ‘Game theory applied to social science’.

Trinity term included a two-day international symposium in honour of the distinguished historian of Spain and Warden of St Antony’s (1968–87) Sir Raymond Carr, which was organised by Julio Crespo-MacLennan (Santander VF). Entitled ‘A reassessment of 20th century Spain’, it brought together Spanish and British scholars who had for the most part worked or studied with Carr. Simone Lässig (Stifterverband VF) organised a two-day workshop on ‘Jewish spaces in modern societies and cultures’, preceded by a keynote lecture by Andreas Gotzmann (Erfurt). The proceedings of this event will be published in the German Historical Perspectives series (Berghahn). Towards the end of the term the centre participated in a one-day conference at the Department of Economics to mark the retirement of Knick Harley after seven years as Professor of Economic History, Governing Body Fellow at St Antony’s and member of the ESC.

Further events in Trinity included a panel discussion convened by SEESOX VF Dimitris Sotiropoulos on ‘A shared Balkan history: a utopia?’, in collaboration with SEESOX and the Georg-Eckert Institute for International Textbook Research in Braunschweig, the home institution of VF Simone Lässig, who took part together with Christine Koulouri (University of the Peloponnesse); a seminar convened by John Beyer (RESC) in collaboration with the Centre for International Studies, ‘Prospects for the Caucasus’; and seminars by Mareike Kleine (LSE) on ‘All roads lead away from Rome. Informal governance in the EU’, by Julian Mischi (CESAER Dijon; Deakin VF 2004/5) on ‘The French Communist Party and the working class’, and by Jonathan Scheele on ‘Extending the EU’s single market to its neighbours: 1992 to redux?’. The ESC also hosted the 2010 RENEW workshop, on ‘Non-European perspectives on Europe in a non-European world’.

Starting this year, the centre is the base for a major new project on ‘Media and Democracy in Central and Eastern Europe’ (MDCCEE), funded by the European Research Council and directed by Jan Zielonka. We also hosted a rich calendar of events organised by SEESOX under the direction of Othon Anastasakis; and the new research programme on ‘Europe’s Muslim neighbourhood: minorities within, majorities without’ directed by Timothy Garton Ash and Kerem Öktem, whose activities included a seminar given by Kerem Öktem on ‘Europe’s Muslim neighbourhood. The German case’ in Michaelmas, and a workshop on ‘Contemporary Islam in the Balkans’ in Trinity. More information about many of these events and programmes can be found elsewhere in the College Record.

The centre continued its broad range of collaborations across St Antony’s and Oxford, including with the Maison Francaise d’Oxford, the Reuters Institute, the Law School, DPIR, the James Martin School and the Oxford Institute for Ethics, Law and Armed Conflict.

This was the first year of Jane Caplan’s three-year term as Director. Lord Patten of Barnes continues as the Patron of the ESC and Timothy Garton Ash as the centre’s honorary chair. The staff members at the centre are Anne-Laure Guillermain (ESC Administrator), Julie Adams (SEESOX Administrator), Denise Line (Secretary and PA to Timothy Garton Ash) and Nicola Shepard (MDCEE Administrator).

South East European Studies at Oxford (SEESOX)

During the academic year 2009–2010, SEESOX further consolidated the established practice of organising events and activities on South East Europe, introducing new visiting fellowships, as well as publishing research, aiming to increase the knowledge and understanding of the region of South East Europe.

The academic year started with a high-level visit from the then Turkish Foreign Minister, Mr Ali Babacan, who visited St Antony’s College on 17 September 2009, to initiate a cooperation between SEESOX and the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs and to mark the introduction of two new Turkish Visiting Fellowships at SEESOX. A conference, co-organised with the Bank of Greece, was held in Athens on 16 October 2009, to discuss ‘Challenges and prospects of South East European economies in the wake of the financial crisis’. The conference was attended by governors and senior officials from European and South East European central banks and commercial banks, economists as well as academics, European Commission and international organisation officials and produced a very interesting joint publication by SEESOX and the Bank of Greece. These two events were followed by a number of guest lectures and seminars during Michaelmas term, including lectures by Atila Eralp (METU), Ayse Kadioglu (Sabanci University/Sabanci Visiting Fellow at SEESOX), Dimitrios Sotiropoulos (University of Athens/Alpha Bank Visiting Fellow at SEESOX), Zoran Pajic (King’s College, London), Andreas Papandreou (University of Athens), Susan Schadler (SAM, St Antony’s College) and Kostas Ifantis (University of Athens) on topics as wide ranging as climate change, state-building in the Balkans, Turkish secularism, Greek–US relations, public reforms and financial and economic governance in the wake of the financial crisis.
Hilary term 2010 was inaugurated with a symposium on the work of late anthropologist and St Antony’s College Governing Body Fellow, John Campbell, whose pioneering anthropological work in post-World War II Greece inspired and informed the work of many social anthropologists today. On 29 January 2010, the symposium, chaired by Warden Margaret McMillan and convened by St Antony’s Honorary Fellow Sir Michael Llewellyn-Smith, gathered together colleagues, friends and former students of John Campbell to remember his life, his work, his books, his teaching and his influence. During Hilary, Othon Anastasakis and Renée Hirschon convened a seminar series ‘Changing identities in South East Europe’. The seminar series explored the various ways in which changing identities have been affected by political, economic and social pressures in South East Europe since the creation of modern nation states, and sought to assess the responses at regional, national and local levels. Guest speakers included Peter Mackridge (St Cross College), Aspasia Papadopoulou (European Commission), Nora Fisher Onar (Bahcesir University), Thanos Veremis (University of Athens), Spyros Sofos (Kingston University), Dejan Djokic (Goldsmiths College) and Dimitris Livaniou (Aristotle University), who addressed the topics of language, education, teaching of history, religion, popular culture, immigration and Europeanisation, and how these shape and affect regional, national, local and/or individual identities in Balkan societies.

Finally, in the context of SEESOX’s co-operation with the EBRD, Max Watson organised a panel discussion on the state of financial transition in Eastern Europe.

Trinity term activities were launched with a four-day conference on Turkish Foreign Policy, which took place between 30 April and 2 May 2010. As a keynote speaker to the event, SEESOX hosted the Foreign Minister of Turkey, Mr Ahmet Davutoglu, who delivered a speech which outlined the core concepts of his foreign policy doctrine and eloquently argued for the need to build bridges with all of Turkey’s neighbours rather than simply the West in a post-Cold War world. During Trinity term, SEESOX, in co-operation with the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, organised a one-day workshop on the ‘Role of the State in South East Europe today’, co-ordinated by the Alpha Bank Visiting Fellow Dr Dimitris Sotiropoulos. The workshop included academics from the UK and the region of South East Europe and officials from European agencies who discussed the role of the state since 2000 in the countries of South East Europe in the areas of governance, social welfare and the economy. More events followed, on the topics of ‘Reconciliation through shared history textbooks in SEE’ delivered by Christina Koulouri (University of Peloponnese), ‘Serbia’s democratisation since Milosevic’s fall’ by Dr Ognjen Pribicevic (ISS, Belgrade) and ‘Muslim legacies in Greece’ by Dimitris Antoniou (St Antony’s College) as well as a book launch of a history volume edited by visiting scholar Alina Pipidi and entitled Ottomans into Europeans. On 21 June 2010 Kerem Oktem organised a workshop which brought together experts and researchers to discuss Islam and Islamic communities in South East Europe, related to his research project ‘Islam and the Balkans’ funded by the British Academy. During Trinity term, SEESOX organised a panel discussion on the ‘Economic crisis in Southern Europe and the Eurozone’, with Theodoros Pangalos, Vice-President of the Greek Government and Joao Cravinhof from Portugal, currently with the EBRD, as the two speakers.
During the 2009–10 academic year, SEESOX hosted several distinguished researchers as College Visiting Fellows and Senior Associate Members. The first Alpha Bank Fellow was Dr Dimitrios Sotiropoulos from the University of Athens who conducted research on the political economy and democratisation of South East Europe. The first Modern Turkey Fellow was Professor Bulent Aras, from Istanbul Technical University, whose research focused on Turkish foreign policy and the Middle East. Professor Ayse Kadioglu was the first Sabanci Fellow at SEESOX doing research on Turkish politics and society, in the context of a close co-operation between SEESOX and Sabanci University. SEESOX also welcomed the work of Senior Associate Members, Peter Sanfey (EBRD), Susan Schadler, former IMF Deputy Director, and Demetrios Theophilactou, Cypriot diplomat. In addition to these visiting scholars, SEESOX benefited from the contribution of Max Watson, the co-ordinator of the political economy programme and the DPhil student Mehmet Karli who worked for the smooth organisation of most Turkish activities including the high-level visits and the four-day Turkish conference.

SEESOX publications this year were enriched by two books, Greece in the Balkans: Memory, Conflict and Exchange, edited by Othon Anastasakis, Dimitar Bechev and Nicholas Vrousalis and Turkey’s Engagement with Modernity, edited by Celia J Kerslake, Kerem Oktem and Philip Robins.

Finally, in Michaelmas 2009 SEESOX introduced the option course ‘South East Europe: Politics, Economics and European Integration’ taught by Othon Anastasakis and Dimitar Bechev for the students from the Russian and East European Studies. The course focused on the recent history of the region in integrating with the EU and other regions through a cross-country, comparative and interdisciplinary approach to the topics of post-communist transition, EU enlargement, EU integration, ethnic conflicts and state-building.

Media and Democracy in Central and Eastern Europe (MDCEE)

www.mde.politics.ox.ac.uk

The European Studies Centre is hosting a major new interdisciplinary research project under the directorship of Professor Jan Zielonka. Launched in October 2009 and managed through the University’s Department of Politics and International Relations, the project has four years’ funding from the European Research Council to undertake a comparative study of the ten countries of Central and Eastern Europe to join the EU since 2004. Although we focus on the often troublesome and poorly understood relationship between democracy and the media in the region – asking ‘What kind of democracy is needed for the media to function effectively?’ – our findings should have a broader applicability to consolidating democracies worldwide. We are looking both at ‘old’ news media (broadcast and print) and the ‘new media’ of the internet, with our empirical research divided into three pillars, each headed by one of our Senior Research Fellows: media ownership and commercial pressures (Dr Vaclav Stetka); media regulation and political pressures (Dr Peter Bajomi-Lazar); and journalistic autonomy and professionalisation (Dr Henrik Ornebring).
In 2009–10, the project organised two high-profile seminars in Hilary term. The first, ‘Uses and misuses of comparative transnational research in social sciences’, was led by our Co-Investigator Professor Terhi Rantanen and held at the LSE. The second, an international seminar on ‘Public service broadcasting as a vehicle for democracy: comparing the Mediterranean and East Central Europe’, was jointly led by Professor Jan Zielonka and Professor Paolo Mancini (University of Perugia and Fondazione Monte dei Paschi Visiting Fellow at St Antony’s in 2009–10). Held at St Antony’s European Studies Centre, the seminar brought together academics and media practitioners from over 15 countries and incorporated the Fondazione Monte dei Paschi Annual Public Lecture on ‘Media challenges today and the future of journalism: the view from Italy’, given by the President of the Italian public service broadcaster RAI, Paolo Garimberti.

As well as working closely with Professor Paolo Mancini, the project sponsored two distinguished Visiting Fellows, who joined the team in Oxford in 2009–10: Professor Alina Mungiu-Pipidi (Hertie School of Governance, Berlin); and Dr Inka Salovaara-Moring (Tallinn University/University of Helsinki). We have recruited a project Advisory Committee, with 14 members drawn from across the region and disciplines. And our Senior Research Fellows have undertaken a first round of fieldwork in Estonia, Hungary and the Czech Republic, interviewing key actors in the media field, with further interviews scheduled in Latvia, Lithuania, Slovakia, Bulgaria, Romania and Slovenia for early autumn 2010.

Our first year was spent establishing and starting to implement our media research agenda and data-gathering. The second year will focus on aspects of democracy, with a seminar series on Wednesday evenings in Michaelmas term 2010 on ‘Democracy in Central and Eastern Europe: state of the art’; and an international conference on ‘Pluralism and the public sphere in central and eastern Europe’ in March 2011. We will continue to extend and deepen our network of Visiting Fellows and partners in both eastern and western Europe, with publication of our results scheduled to begin in 2011–12.

Governing Body Fellows

PROFESSOR JANE CAPLAN, Professor of Modern European History whose primary research and teaching interests are in the history of Nazi Germany and 19th/20th century governmentality, specifically the history of individual identification. After some years of living a bifurcated research life, she is currently merging these two areas into a project on the policing and proof of identity in Nazi Germany.

At the start of the academic year she took over as Director of the European Studies Centre, for a three-year term, a task which absorbed much of her time over the year. The programme of the centre is recorded elsewhere in this report, but the activities she organised at the centre under other hats included the workshop convened with the Visiting Fellow in German History, Professor Simone Lässig, on ‘Jewish spaces in modern societies and cultures. Germany in comparative perspective’, which brought four panels of mainly younger German scholars to the centre for two days of papers and discussions; and a new weekly research seminar on international history and politics, ‘Writing Europe in the world’, which was co-organised in Hilary with Professor Anne Deighton (Politics) and Dr Patricia Clavin (Jesus). We hope this will become an annual series at the centre.

For the History Faculty, she continued to co-convene the Modern German History research seminar in Michaelmas, and rejoined the steering committee of the Modern European History Research Centre. She also began a three-year term as Chair of the Examination Board for the Master’s programmes in Modern European and British History.

Other activity on the scholarly front was somewhat compromised by these new administrative duties. She steered the final year of the international network on the history of identity documentation, funded by a grant from the Leverhulme Trust, which ran a second successful workshop followed by a public conference, ‘Identifying the person: past, present and future’, in September 2009; the network site is at http://identinet.org.uk/. She gave papers on her research in Oxford, London, Linz and Paris. Her publications included a volume of essays coedited with Nikolaus Wachsmann, Concentration Camps in Nazi Germany: The New Histories (London: Routledge), which included her chapter on ‘Gender and the Camps’, ‘Illegibility. Reading and Insecurity in History, Law and Government’, History Workshop Journal 68 (Autumn 2009), and “‘Indelible Memories’: The Tattooed Body as Theatre of Memory’, in Performing the Past. Memory and the Making of European Culture, eds Frank van Vree, Karin Tilmans and Jay Winter (Amsterdam University Press).

PROFESSOR TIMOTHY GARTON ASH, Professor of European Studies, Isaiah Berlin Professorial Fellow and Honorary Chair of the European Studies Centre. This year his research focussed particularly on the subject of free speech. How can it be defended, enhanced but also effectively regulated in the global village created by the internet and the consequences of mass migration? He organised a workshop on this subject, entitled ‘Free Speech: old principles, new circumstances’, together with Jeremy Waldron, the Chichele Professor-Elect of Social and Political Theory. He is working on a book on the subject, which he hopes to complete in 2010.

A good deal of his time at the college was devoted to the newly-established Dahrendorf Programme for the Study of Freedom (www.sant.ox.ac.uk/esc/dahrendorffreedom.html), which commemorates the college’s third Warden and is devoted to a subject to which Ralf Dahrendorf dedicated much of his life. The Dahrendorf Programme organised the first annual Ralf Dahrendorf Memorial Lecture, which was delivered by Lord (Adair) Turner, the Chairman of the Financial Services Authority on ‘Well-being and inequality in Post-Industrial society’. Responses were given by Lord (Robert Skidelsky) and Professor Paul Collier. As well as a research agenda, the programme has four Dahrendorf Scholars, selected in a competitive process by a committee consisting of Professor Garton Ash, the Warden and Professor Rosemary Foot. Each scholar assists in the work of the programme, but also does a piece of independent research. This year’s scholars are Dominic Burbidge (‘Doing God in Britain’), Andreas Knab (‘Digital dimensions of asymmetric warfare: comparing US and German policy responses to online jihadism’), Christopher Kutarna Neoliberalism and political freedom in China’) and Xibai Xu (‘Democracy as good governance in China’). The programme is generously supported by the Aurea Foundation, the Zeit Foundation and the Fritt Ord Foundation.

He spent much of the autumn of 2009 at commemorative lectures, conferences and workshops in many different countries looking back at the velvet revolutions of 1989, the end of communism and the end of the Cold War. He wrote a major review article in the New York Review of Books (November 5, 2009) on the new literature on 1989, and a further article looking not just at the history of velvet revolution but also at its subsequent development and prospects as a new type of revolution, arguably supplanting, or at least competing with, the violent model of 1989 (New York Review of Books, December 3, 2009). A third focus of his research was the difficult quest for a European foreign policy. As well as studying and writing about this, he attempted to make a contribution to bringing it about through his work on the Board of the European Council on Foreign Relations. Success is far from apparent. He also continued to write about European and international affairs in his weekly column in The Guardian, which is syndicated in a number of countries in Europe, Asia and the Americas (see www.timothygartonash.com).

PROFESSOR KNICK HARLEY is Professor of Economic History. He is retiring from the college and the University this year. His ongoing research involves industrialisation in Britain and America and the evolution of the international economy in the 19th century. He convened the University Seminar in Economic and Social History at the centre during Hilary term. He published the article ‘Economic history and economics over a generation’, Rivista de Sotria Economica, 25:3 (December 2009). He also presented his paper ‘Globalisation and the Frontier: 1870–1930: the Canadian Prairie’ at the University of Barcelona in March.

Emeritus Fellows

MR RICHARD CLOGG gave a paper on ‘Early publications in “Graeco-Turkish” of the British and Foreign Bible Society’ at a workshop entitled ‘Between religion and language: Karamanlidika, Armeno-Turkish, Hebrew-Turkish and Aljamiado texts in the Ottoman Empire’, held at Yildiz Technical University in Istanbul in June 2010. He also spoke on ‘John Campbell, St Antony’s and the modern history of Greece’ at the memorial meeting ‘Anthropology and History: Remembering John Campbell’ in January 2010 and at the launch of Wim van Meurs and Alina Mungiu-Pippidi, eds Ottomans into Europeans: State and Institution-Building in South-Eastern Europe in May 2010.

PROFESSOR A J NICHOLLS is an Emeritus Fellow of St Antony's with a particular interest in contemporary Germany. He continues to work on a study of Anglo-German relations since 1945. In May 2010 he published a review article in the Bulletin of the German Historical Institute London on the last volume of Hans-Ulrich Wehler's Deutsche Gesellschaftsgeschichte.

PROFESSOR JAN ZIELONKA is Ralf Dahrendorf Fellow in European Politics. Last year he launched his new large international project on ‘Media and Democracy and in Central and Eastern Europe’ funded by the European Research Council. Together with Professor Mancini from the University of Perugia he organised the first conference within the project on ‘Public service broadcasting as a vehicle for democracy: comparing the Mediterranean and East Central Europe’, (March 2010). More information about the media project is available at http://mde.politics.ox.ac.uk/. He also continued his work on the European Union and on contemporary empires. He lectured at several leading academic institutions, including Harvard University, Waseda University in Tokyo, University of Taipei, MGIMO in Moscow, University of New South Wales in Sydney, Monash University in Melbourne, Jagiellonian University in Cracow and the University of Warsaw. More information about his research and publications can be found on his website: www.sant.ox.ac.uk/people/zielonka/index.html.

His scholarly papers appeared in Multicultural Discourses and the European Journal of Turkish Studies, as well as in two collections on gender politics in Turkey (‘Alles Stehende verdampft: Homosexuelle Bewegungen und Identitäten im Kontext patriarchaler Machstrukturen’, Holzleithner, Elisabeth and Sabine Strasser, Multikulturalismus queer gelesen (Campus) and on toponymical nationalism in Greece and Turkey (‘Uluslararası ve Yunanistan’da toponomik politikalar’), in: Millas, Herkül and Ashhan Doğan Topçu, Sözde Masum Milliyetçilik (Kitap). He also continued to publish opinion pieces in Open Democracy and Middle East Report Online.

In Trinity term, Dr Öktem co-convened the international conference ‘Turkey’s foreign policy in a changing world: old alignments and new neighbourhoods’ in co-operation with SEESOX and Sabanci University. A collection of the proceedings is being prepared for publication in 2011. As part of his British Academy funded research project ‘Europe’s Muslim neighbourhoods’, Dr Öktem conducted fieldwork throughout the academic year in the Balkans and the Netherlands, and organised the workshop ‘After the Wahhabi mirage: Islam, politics and transnational networks in the Balkans’ in June 2010.

On the teaching side, he convened the graduate seminar ‘Cities and societies in the Middle East’ together with Dr Leila Vignal and taught ‘the Politics of the Middle East’ at the Oriental Institute.

DR DAVID RECHTER is Research Fellow in Modern Jewish History, University Research Lecturer in Oriental Studies, and Fellow in Modern Jewish History at the Oxford Centre for Hebrew and Jewish Studies. During the past year he was elected International Vice-President of the Leo Baeck Institute, the world's leading body for the study of German-speaking Jewry. He organised, with Professor Christian Wiese of the University of Sussex, an international summer school for graduate students in European Jewish History and Culture, and lectured about his research on Habsburg Jewry at the Central European University in Budapest. In Trinity term, he convened with Professor Robert Evans and Dr Natalia Nowakowska a History Faculty seminar on ‘East and East-Central Europe (16th–20th centuries)’. He has been awarded an Arts and Humanities Research Council Research Fellowship for 2010–11, to enable him to complete his book on the Jews of Habsburg Bukovina (1775–1918).

Associate Members and Visiting Fellows

PROFESSOR ELENA INARRA was the Basque Visiting Fellow for 2008–2009. During her stay she gave seminars at Nuffield College, Oxford University, Istanbul Bilgi
University and Nottingham University. She organised a workshop on ‘Matching Theory and Mechanism Design’. She worked on two research projects, the first one jointly with Clara Ponsati on ‘Bilateral betting systems: the case of the Basque Pelota’ and the second one on ‘Evolutionary Game Theory’ jointly with Annick Laruelle, writing three working papers on these two topics.

PROFESSOR SIMONE LÄSSIG held the Stifterverband Fellowship. Her research in Oxford focused on Jewish concepts of ‘self-improvement’ in 19th century Germany and Europe, on images of communism in most recent school textbooks, and, thirdly, on representations of Europe and Europeanness in 20th and 21st century history textbooks worldwide. For the latter aspect of her research she wrote and submitted a comprehensive proposal for a long-term research and edition project. At the college she co-convened the workshop ‘Jewish spaces in modern societies and cultures: Germany in comparative perspective’ with Jane Caplan, co-organised the panel discussion ‘A shared Balkan history’ with Dimitri Sotiropoulos and Jane Caplan, and presented a paper on history textbooks at the ESC. She chaired the Panel ‘Jews in 20th century Europe’ at a Europaeum Workshop, lectured on ‘Civilising the Other and civilising the Self: Jews and “Civil Improvement” in 19th century Europe’ at the Oxford Centre for Hebrew and Jewish Studies, Yarnton Manor, and spoke on ‘Lessons from a troubled past: representations of socialism in German and European history textbooks’ at the German Historical Institute London. She published a co-edited volume on the history of philanthropy from a German-American perspective and another on textbooks in contemporary Scandinavia.

DR JULIO CRESCO MACLENNAN was the first Santander Visiting Fellow in Iberian and European Studies. After almost a decade in which research into Spain has been conspicuously absent from St Antony’s, he has been active in reviving interest in this country’s contemporary history, politics and society. His main activity at the college has been to convene an international symposium under the title of ‘A reassessment of Spain in the 20th century’. The event was organised in honour of Sir Raymond Carr and it counted on the participation of some of the most distinguished experts in the field.

To commemorate the 30th anniversary of the Ortega y Gasset University Institute in Madrid, Julio MacLennan invited Margaret Macmillan to Madrid, where she gave a lecture on the subject of her last book: the uses and abuses of history. He is also pleased to announce that the Ortega y Gasset Institute intends to set up an Iberian Studies Fellowship and a university lectureship at Oxford.

Dr MacLennan has also been very active working on his new book project: Fortune seekers and adventurers: the rise and fall of Europe in the world. This is a comparative history of European colonial empires to be published in English and Spanish towards the end of next year. He will also edit a book on Spain in the 20th century with Palgrave, based on the St Antony’s symposium’s proceedings and is also about to publish an article based on recent research into the relationship between Spain and Latin America. He has written on a regular basis for the Spanish press, particularly for the dailies ABC and El Imparcial and has lectured in several institutions including IE Business School in Madrid, Antwerp University and the Catholic University in Portugal. Revista de Occidente, Spain’s leading academic journal will publish his interview with Margaret Macmillan discussing the uses and abuses of history.

MR JONATHAN SCHEELE was the first EU Visiting Fellow at the centre, for the academic year 2009–2010. During his stay in Oxford his research has focused on issues affecting the extension of the EU’s Single Transport Market to neighbouring third countries. He delivered a seminar on his research at the Centre on 14 June 2010, as well as one on European transport infrastructure policy, to the University’s Transport Studies Unit, on 3 February 2010. He co-convened a well-attended half-day workshop at the centre on 26 February 2010, on ‘The EU and its eastern neighbours – what kind of partnership?’ Speakers included Vadim Triukhan, from the Foreign Ministry of Ukraine, Nigel Gould-Davies, from the FCO, and John O’Rourke of the European Commission, as well as a number of academics from the Universities of Aberystwyth, Birmingham, Harvard, Lublin and Oxford. During his stay at St Antony’s, as well as participating in the centre’s activities, he has spoken at conferences in Brussels, London, Montenegro, Zagreb and Zaragoza. On 28 February 2010, he delivered a lecture on the theme ‘Quo vadis Romania?’ in the series organised by the National Theatre of Romania in Bucharest. More details can be found on his blog at http://scheejo.wordpress.com/.

DR DIMITRI A SOTIROPOULOS was SEESOX/Alpha Bank Fellow for the academic year 2009–2011. In November 2009 Dimitri gave a paper in the European Studies Centre (ESC) on why public policy reforms often fail in Greece and also presented a paper in Paris, at the Faculty of Political Science (‘Science Po’), on the Europeanisation of welfare policies in Greece. In March 2010 he was a panellist in the annual Political Studies Association conference (in Edinburgh), where he discussed policy reforms in Southern Europe. In April–May he helped organise an ESC seminar on the teaching of history in the Balkans and a SEESOX/Nuffield College talk on the current crisis in Greece, Southern Europe and the Eurozone. In May he also co-ordinated a SEESOX workshop on the role of the state in South East Europe (SEE), in which academics and experts from the UK and the SEE region participated. Dimitri and Ayse Kadioglu (SEESOX/Sabanci Fellow) also presented a talk on Europeanisation and citizenship in Greece and Turkey at the Warden’s Seminar in St Antony’s. During the academic year Dimitri did research on the outcomes of the 20 year long democratisation process in post-communist Balkans, focusing on the quality of democracy.

MR MAX WATSON is Visiting Fellow and co-ordinates political economy activities in SEESOX. Much of his work in the past year has focused on the impact of the global crisis in Southeast Europe. He helped organise the first SEESOX–Bank of Greece conference in Athens, which was devoted to this topic, and co-edited the conference volume. He also co-chaired a SEESOX–LSE workshop on the evolving role of the state in the region; and he chaired a SEESOX–EBRD seminar on the economic implications of the crisis. He helped organise and co-chair workshops on Southeast Europe in Tirana and in Washington to explore the role of the EU and international institutions in helping anchor policy reforms in EU candidate and potential candidate countries. He also organised and chaired a Southeast Europe regional workshop on financial stability at the Centre for Excellence in Finance in Ljubljana. His paper ‘Financial stability in a Brave
New World’, was published in the Austrian National Bank’s research volume on Recent Developments in the Baltic Countries – What are the Lessons for Southeastern Europe? (2009).

A second focus of his work was Cyprus reunification. He continued to convene a working group of economists from the northern and southern parts of the island. He also chaired a joint meeting of Cyprus economists with international experts to discuss the economic impact of a solution. His paper ‘Growing together? – prospects for economic convergence and reunification in Cyprus’, was published in Cyprus: a Conflict at the Crossroads, edited by Thomas Diez and Nathalie Tocci (Manchester University Press, 2009). Meanwhile, his programme of visits to study the economy of Turkey also continued; he was on the Academic Advisory Board and spoke at the SEESOX–Sabanci University Conference on ‘Turkey’s foreign policy in a changing world’.

Finally, he extended earlier research on the process of economic adjustment in the euro area, and co-authored a report for the Irish Government and Oireachtas (Parliament) on the sources of the banking crisis in Ireland. His paper co-authored with Istvan Szekely ‘Are there speed limits to real convergence?’ appeared in Real Convergence in Central, Eastern and Southeastern Europe (Palgrave Macmillan, 2009).
2009–10 has been a hectic, but successful, year for the Latin American Centre. As a modest-sized department it has to balance heavy teaching and supervision commitments against the needs of research, but faculty have once again risen to the challenge and have coped with a large – and, it seems, happy – student community, whilst pushing back the frontiers of knowledge in their diverse fields.

Alan Knight was on sabbatical in Michaelmas term, but then returned to take up the slippery reins of the centre directorship during Tim Power’s sabbatical in Hilary and Trinity terms. Leigh Payne, Eduardo Posada-Carbó and, in particular, Diego Sánchez-Ancochea (Director of Graduate Studies) contributed personally to the centre’s busy agenda this year, both on the teaching and the research/events side, and we would like to acknowledge the contributions of Joe Foweraker, Laurence Whitehead, John Crabtree, Laura Rival, David Preston and Carlos Pio.

Academic events this year have included workshops on ‘Presidential-Legislative relations in Africa, Latin America and Post-Communist Europe’, held in collaboration with the African and Russian and Eastern European study programmes, and ‘Peruvian democracy: old problems, new challenges’. Two workshops were also held as part of the Brazilian Studies Programme: ‘Brazil as a global power’ and ‘Legislator views of Brazilian governance’, and a film series was also organised in Michaelmas, ‘Brazilian politics and society through film’.

This year we said goodbye to our two librarians, Nathalie Chaddock-Thomas and Laura Salinas, and we welcomed back Frank Egerton, who is now the Subject Consultant for Latin American Studies. The library – now rebranded as the BLACL – continues to provide a vital resource, now thanks to Rebeca Otazua and Sam Truman who are working alongside Frank. Lucía Raynero Morales was the Andrés Bello Fellow this year, and Gustavo Bell Lemus a Visiting Research Associate of the LAC, sharing our lavish annex along with a Dutch visitor, Professor Wil Pansters. All three gave papers in our seminar series. We said goodbye to Chris Spragg, our long-serving scout, whose dulcet warblings (among other things) will be missed; and in his place we welcome Chris Hayward. Finally, we are very grateful to Elvira Ryan and David Robinson, Secretary and Administrator of the centre, for their indefatigable work and continued good humour: a combination we will need plenty of in these times of austerity.

Governing Body Fellows

PROFESSOR JOE FOWERAKER, Professor of Latin American Politics and Fellow, continued into his second year as Head of the School of Interdisciplinary and Area Studies. He ran a second research away-day for the school in February, and took it through a departmental review in May. He also continued as Chair of Examiners for the Latin American Centre’s three postgraduate degrees.
Academic administration aside, he has continued to research and write on central government institutions (formal and informal) in Latin America and beyond; and has recently been invited to advise the Mexican legislature on the conduct of coalition government. This work is part of a continuing comparative inquiry into the nature of really-existing democracy, and he hopes to complete a monograph on this topic during his year of sabbatical leave in 2011–2012.

Unusually, the toughest assignment of his year was for the college, but this was amply compensated by the letter of thanks he received from the Warden for ‘his work in selecting some good wines for our receptions and high tables’, so enhancing the conviviality of the college.

PROFESSOR ALAN KNIGHT, 2010 being the centenary of the Mexican revolution and the bicentenary of the Latin American movements (more or less), this academic year has been largely given over to talks, events and conferences with a (bi)centennial slant (in addition to normal teaching, supervision, and the delights of directing the LAC for the third and final time). Note to the Mexicans (and anyone else for that matter): do try to space out your national epics and avoid excessive clustering. It's like having your birthday on Boxing Day. As a result, he gave talks on aspects of independence and/or the Mexican revolution at the British Museum (twice), San Diego (the American Historical Association Congress), the University of Geneva, the Universidad Autónoma de Baja California, Mexicali and Tijuana campuses, the University of Texas at Austin and Leiden University. Plenty more to come in the second half of the year; though by then he will have greeted Tim Power like a returning Messiah, as he resumes the LAC directorship.

PROFESSOR LEIGH A PAYNE, Professor of Sociology of Latin America and Senior Fellow of St Antony's College, received this year a collaborative research grant from the National Science Foundation (US) and the Arts and Humanities Research Council (UK) to conduct the next phase of her Transitional Justice Data base project. In the first phase, she and her research team used statistical analysis to determine when transitional justice brings improvements in human rights and democracy. The findings from that first phase came out in 2010 in a book (Transitional Justice in Balance: Weighing Efficacy, Comparing Processes, USIP Press). Articles on the findings have also been accepted for publication and are published or forthcoming in Human Rights Quarterly, Taiwan Journal of Democracy, International Studies Quarterly, Revista Anistia, and Journal of Peace Research. In the next phase of the research they will use qualitative methods to complement the quantitative research. Among the places where she presented her work this year are: Korean Truth and Reconciliation Commission (Seoul), Brazilian Ministry of Justice (Rio and Belém), University of São Paulo (Brazil), University of Minnesota, University of the Andes (Bogota, Colombia) and Gesellschaft für Technische Zusammenarbeit (GTZ-Santa Marta, Colombia).

DR TIMOTHY J POWER, University Lecturer in Brazilian Studies (and fellow of St Cross), served as Director of the LAC during Michaelmas term. During Michaelmas, he organised a workshop on ‘Legislator views of Brazilian governance’, which analysed a survey conducted among 139 Brazilian federal legislators in mid-2009 (with generous support from Abbey-Santander). He was on research leave in Brazil during Hilary and Trinity terms, during which Alan Knight served as interim director of the centre. In Brazil, Dr Power completed two edited volumes on Brazilian politics (on political corruption and the National Congress, respectively), observed the 2010 general elections and began work on a new project comparing the administrations of presidents Cardoso and Lula. While on leave, he gave presentations at the Brazilian Studies Association (in Brasília), the Brazilian Political Science Association (in Recife), and the Latin American Political Science Association. He also gave invited lectures at the University of São Paulo and at the federal universities of Brasília, Paraná, Santa Catarina Rio Grande do Sul and Pernambuco.

DR DIEGO SANCHEZ-ANCOCHEA was named Director of Graduate Studies of the Latin American Centre in only his second year in Oxford. It was a time-consuming activity and, at times, difficult to balance with teaching, advising and research. In terms of research, Dr Sanchez-Ancochea spent a significant part of the academic year working on a collaborative project with Juliana Martinez Franzoni on the social state in Costa Rica. The project, which aims to explain the determinants of universal social policies in the developing world, recently received financial support from a British Academy small grant. Dr Sanchez-Ancochea also collaborated actively with the Journal of Latin American Studies, writing two reviews and participating in the meetings of the Editorial Board, and became member of the editorial board of Development Policy Review. During the academic year, he had the opportunity to make presentations of his work at the School of Oriental and African Studies and MountHolyoke College and at the conference of the European Council on Latin America (CEISAL) and did fieldwork trips to Guatemala, Costa Rica and the Dominican Republic. He published two articles in Spanish and submitted papers to several development journals.

Research Fellow

DR EDUARDO POSADA-CARBO, Departmental Lecturer in Latin American Politics at the Latin American Centre, and Senior Research Fellow at St Antony’s.

He completed the edition of the second volume of the Historia Contemporánea de Colombia – a five-volume history of Colombia –to be published by Fundación Mapfre in Spain – for which he is the general editor. The first volume of the series will be launched in November this year in Bogotá, together with the opening of an exhibition of Colombian history through photography, curated by Malcolm Deas. With Iván Jaksić, the Director of the Stanford University programme in Chile, he completed the edition of the book El liberalismo latinoamericano del siglo XIX: Ensayos de historia intelectual y política, which will be published by the Fondo de Cultura Económica in Santiago later this year, and for which he wrote a chapter on Colombian liberalism. He co-authored with Iván Jaksić, the article ‘Naufragios y sobrevivencias del liberalismo latinoamericano’, published by Revista de Occidente (Madrid, October 2009). He completed the revision of a manuscript on ‘Newspapers, politics and elections in Colombia, 1830–1930’, which will be published in the Historical Journal during this academic year. In addition, he continued to work towards the completion of an edited collection on Elections and the Dr Posada-Carbó contributed to several academic seminars and related events to commemorate the bicentenary of independence in Latin America: in August 2009 in Santiago, Chile, he participated in a meeting with scholars from México, Argentina, Chile and Colombia, co-ordinated by former President Ricardo Lagos, and in an additional panel with leading Latin American intellectuals held at the Biblioteca Nacional; in April this year, he gave a presentation at the British Academy in a seminar organised by the British Academy and the Colombian Embassy in London; in May, he presented a paper at a conference organised by Professor Patricio Silva at the University of Leiden in The Netherlands; in June he participated in a round table with other historians at the British Library; and in August, he presented a paper at a seminar course in the Universidad Menéndez y Pelayo in Santander, Spain. In addition, he wrote the prologue for a book edited by María Teresa Calderón, from the Externado University in Bogotá, which reflects upon the last one hundred years of the history of Colombia; and he also wrote a chapter for the catalogue that will accompany the exhibition on ‘Memorias de la independencia en el primer centenario de España y América (1908–1912)’, curated by Javier Moreno Luzón in Madrid, Spain.

Associate Members and Visiting Fellows

MR ALAN ANGELL, Emeritus Fellow continues to work on Chile. He recently published 'Democratic governance in Chile' in Scott Mainwaring and Timothy Scully, Democratic Governance in Latin America (Stanford University Press 2009), and 'Social Class and Political Mobilisation in Allende's Chile' in A Contracorriente Vol 7 No 2 Winter 2010.

MR GUSTAVO BELL attended the lectures of the Latin American Centre of the Trinity term. He read the most recent literature related to his thesis in order to update it and made some research of secondary sources available in the Bodleian Library. On 27 April 2010, in the seminar ‘UK–Colombia collaboration: past, present and future’, organised by the Colombian Embassy and The British Academy, he gave the lecture ‘British Cartagena’.

MR MALCOLM DEAS is gradually recovering from the trauma of moving out of his room at the end of Trinity term 2008, which without the aid of Estelle Hussein, Elvira Ryan, Frank Egerton and Laura Wainwright he would never have managed to do.
On these occasions, the college should at least offer counselling. As it is, it merely begins to charge for lunch, plus VAT. Alas, we do not have the resources of St Johns, All Souls or Nuffield, but a few free lunches would be more welcome to emeriti than an unlikely number of free High Tables. Together with his proposal to move the flagpole, at present still set in the strong concrete of the college's aesthetic inertia, he recommends this to the urgent consideration of the Management Executive Team.

DR JOHN CRABTREE, a member of the SCR, has spent another year working on the politics of the Andean countries, with the emphasis on Peru and Bolivia but with occasional forays further north into Ecuador. To mark the 30 years since the restoration of civilian rule in Peru, he organised a two-day conference in March 2010 entitled ‘Peruvian democracy: old problems, new challenges’. The keynote speaker at the conference, held in the college, was Julio Cotler from the Instituto de Estudios Peruanos in Lima, whose first works on Peruvian society date from the 1960s. The two-day conference – which also involved other prominent peruanistas from the UK, North America and Peru itself – attracted some 70 attendees. He plans to produce the papers in published form.

His publications over the last twelve months include a translation into Spanish of his co-edited volume (with Laurence Whitehead and George Gray Molina) on Bolivian politics entitled Tensiones irresueltas: Bolivia pasado y presente and published in La Paz jointly by Plural and the United Nations Development Program (UNDP). He has also published a commentary article in the Journal of Latin American Studies (Vol 42, Part 2, May 2010) under the title of ‘Democracy without parties: some lessons from Peru’. In addition, he has a chapter in a forthcoming book on extractive industries in the Andes (edited by Professor Anthony Bebbington and to be published by Routledge) on the comparative historical and political contexts of mining and hydrocarbons development in Ecuador, Peru and Bolivia. Finally, he has a chapter in another forthcoming book on contemporary Bolivian politics (edited by Adrian Pearce and to be published by the Institute for the Study of the Americas, University of London) which deals with elections and electoral validation since 1999.

He has continued to play an active role in the teaching programme of the Latin American Centre, as well as other University departments. His annual ten-week course on Latin American political economy in Hilary term continues to draw an enthusiastic crowd of mature students interested in patterns of development in the region.

DR LUCIA RAYNERO: As Andrés Bello Fellow of St Antony's College (Oxford University) her research was focused primarily on the concept of democracy in the 18th and early 19th centuries in England to compare it with the concept of democracy in Venezuela for the period of the First Republic between 1810 and 1812.

With regard to studies of democracy in England she found more than 2,000 articles in the British press for the 17th, 18th and early 19th centuries (until 1804) in the Burney Collection Newspapers from the British Library and also consulted 19th Century British Library Newspapers, Part II. Another essential primary source was the parliamentary debates. Books and articles on the subject were consulted in the Bodleian Library.

During her stay in Oxford she was able to attend many conferences, seminars and lectures both in the Latin American Centre and outside of the centre. She attended a series of talks related to democracy in England and France in the 18th and 19th centuries organised by Joanna Innes and Mark Philp. These talks were especially important for her research.

On 9 March 2010 she gave a special seminar entitled ‘The notions of democracy and citizenship in Venezuela during the First Republic, 1810–1812’. A former title for this seminar was ‘Theory and practice of a frustrated aspiration: the notions of democracy and citizenship in the First Republic of Venezuela 1810–1812’.
MIDDLE EASTERN STUDIES

The Middle East Centre

The Centre welcomed a new Governing Body Fellow with the start of the academic year. Professor Tariq Ramadan assumed the new HH Sheikh Hamad Bin Khalifa Al Thani Chair in Contemporary Islamic Studies on 1 October. He moved into the converted ground floor flat of 68 Woodstock Road, which now provides a two-office suite for Professor Ramadan and an Administrator who will oversee the exchanges between Oxford and the Qatar Faculty of Islamic Studies.

In March 2010, Professor Ramadan and Dr Rogan travelled to Doha to meet with the Dean and Faculty of Islamic Studies, to set in motion the teaching and research exchanges between the two campuses. In September 2010, Professor Ramadan will begin a ten-year commitment teaching each autumn in Doha. He has also convened a committee that brings together the Oxford Centre for Islamic Studies, the Oriental Institute, the European Studies Centre and the Middle East Centre to co-ordinate research collaboration with Doha, to be conducted each spring.

Plans for the new Middle East Centre building by Zaha Hadid continued over the course of the year. The college approved the landscape plans for both the Woodstock Road frontage and within the college curtilage. The building site was cleared of trees, and four large samples of cladding materials in stainless steel, Corten steel, and two colours of GFRP were exhibited on the building site to facilitate the crucial decision about building materials. The project will go to tender in 2011, and we anticipate breaking-ground towards the end of 2011.

At the end of the academic year, we said goodbye to two Research Fellows who have made valuable contributions to the life of the centre. Dr Leïla Vignal held a two-year Marie Curie Fellowship to examine the impact of globalisation on Middle Eastern cities. In Michaelmas term she convened an excellent seminar series on ‘The Arab World in the global crisis’ that brought Rodney Wilson (Durham), Hein de Haas (Oxford), Adeel Malik (Oxford), Bassam Fattouh (SOAS), Masood Ahmed (IMF) and Brigitte Dumortier (Paris IV Sorbonne) to the MEC, as well as giving a paper herself. She moves to Rennes, where she takes up a new Chair d’Excellence.

Dr Maha Shuayb completed her second year as Center for Lebanese Studies Visiting Fellow, in which she undertook major new research on education and civic identity in Lebanon today. She convened a remarkable conference in Beirut in October 2009 that assembled academics and practitioners in education from across the spectrum of state and private schools in Lebanon, of all religious communities. She also gave a number of seminar presentations at the centre in the course of the year to share her research findings. She moves to take up a new post in Education at Cambridge. She will be succeeded by Sami Hermez, who has just completed his doctorate at Princeton.
The centre launched a number of new books by fellows: The Persians: Ancient, Medieval and Modern Iran (Yale), by Homa Katouzian; The Arabs: A History (Basic Books and Penguin), by Eugene Rogan; What I Believe (Oxford), by Tariq Ramadan; and Israel and Palestine: Reappraisals, Revisions, Refutations (Verso), by Avi Shlaim.

The centre also welcomed a number of authors to speak on their new books, including David Gardner (Last Chance: The Middle East in the Balance), Alex Strick van Linschoten and Felix Kuehn (My Life with the Taliban), Dawn Chatty (Displacement and Dispossession in the Modern Middle East), Shahira Samy (Reparations to Palestinian Refugees: A Comparative Perspective) and Gilbert Achcar (The Arabs and the Holocaust).

Dr Armbrust convened the Hilary term seminar on ‘New ethnographies of the Middle East’, building on the growing interest in social anthropology in the MEC community. After giving the opening seminar, Dr Armbrust welcomed Samuli Schielke (Berlin) and Daniela Swarawsky (Rotterdam); Judith Scheele (All Souls College, Oxford); Morgan Clarke (Manchester); Zuzanna Olszewska (St John’s College, Oxford); and Lucie Ryzova (St John’s College, Oxford).

Dr Raffaella Del Sarto, Pears Research Fellow in Israel Studies, convened a number of lectures in Israel studies in the course of the Academic year. Retired Justice Dalia Dorner of Israel’s Supreme Court spoke on minority rights in Israel; Yuval Ginbar (Amnesty International) spoke on torture and the law in Israel; Guy Ben-Porat (Ben-Gurion University) discussed consumerism and secularism in Israel; Gershon Gorenberg (Columbia) examined the origins of the settlement movement, 1967–77; Helga Tawil-Souri (New York University) looked at media and war in Israel; Shimon Shamir (Tel Aviv) spoke on Israel’s place in the Middle East; Alan Dowty (University of Notre Dame) looked at Arab-Jewish relations in Ottoman Palestine; and Mordechai Kremnitzer (Hebrew University) discussed democracy and terrorism from an Israeli perspective.

The centre welcomed John Ging, Director of UNWRA Operations in Gaza, who provided an insider’s view on the current blockade in Gaza in the immediate aftermath of the disastrous ‘Mavi Marmara’ intervention. Ambassador Tom Phillips, UK ambassador to Israel, spoke on the prospects for Arab-Israeli peace. Jubin Goodarzi (Geneva) spoke on the Syrian-Iranian alliance.

A number of speakers gave papers in Arab Gulf studies. David Gwynne-James and Allan Williams spoke on the Omani armed forces in the 1960s; Jerzy Zdanowski (Warsaw) spoke on slavery in the Persian Gulf in the first half of the 20th century; Saudi author Nayef al Rodhan examined critical turning points in the Middle East, 1915–2015.

In addition to the Sheikh Zayed Book Award event, the centre held a number of literary discussions. Sonja Mejcher-Atassi (American University of Beirut) spoke on contemporary book art in the Middle East; Laurent Mignon (Oxford) spoke on Turkish literary historiography and non-Muslim minorities; and Israeli author Eli Amir talked about ‘Home and identity: Baghdad and exile’.

The Sudan Studies Programme held a number of major conferences and lectures under the stewardship of Dr Ahmed Al-Shahi. In October he convened a conference on elections and the referendum on self-determination; in March he chaired a workshop on current research on Sudan; in May he convened a roundtable discussion on Sudanese elections; and in June the programme held a major conference on the prospects for unity on the eve of self-determination in Sudan.

The centre convened a number of workshops and conferences in the course of the year. The centre contributed to a special conference on Turkey and the EU in November. Dr Michael Willis held a workshop on current research on Morocco in March 2010. In June, the centre co-sponsored a one-day workshop on migration to the Gulf states, held at Queen Elizabeth House. And in August 2010, the centre hosted the International Qajar Studies Association conference.

The Seventh Annual King Abdul Aziz Ibn Saud Lecture was given by Professor Gregory Gause of the University of Vermont on 6 May. His title was: ‘Saudi Arabia and “Rentier Exceptionalism”: why the Kingdom does not fit the oil state pattern’.

The Second Sheikh Zayed Book Award event was held on 12 May, with panel presentations by Dr Ammar Ali Hasan (Egypt), author of The Political Establishment of Sufism in Egypt, and by Mr Qais Sedki (UAE), prize-winner in the children’s literature category for his manga novel, Gold Ring.

The 34th Annual George Antonius Lecture was delivered by Patrick Seale on 17 June. His title was: ‘The deep grammar of the Middle East system: what future for Arab Nationalism?’.

The Hourani Scholarship for 2010–11 was awarded to Laia Soto Bermant for her study of community in the Spanish enclave of Melilla and its surrounding area in North East Morocco.

The Ali Pachachi Studentship for 2010–11 was awarded to Chauncy Harris for his work on 19th century migrants in Tunisia and Algeria.

The centre was proud to introduce a new essay prize, the Azizeh Sheibani Essay Prize in Iranian studies. This new prize was established on the initiative of Dr Soraya Tremayne, and will be awarded each year to promote excellence in Iranian studies. The co-winners of the inaugural Azizeh Sheibani Prize were Edward Posnett and Reza Zia-Ebrahimi.

The Walter Zander Prize for the best performance in the MPhil examination was awarded to John McManus.

The staff members at the centre are Julia Cook, Administrator, Mastan Ebtehaj, Librarian, Debbie Usher, Archivist, and Michael Martin, Housekeeper.
Middle East Centre Archive

During the past year 119 readers have made 228 visits to the Middle East Centre Archive and consulted 1112 items. The archivist, Debbie Usher, has answered 975 enquiries and supplied 948 photocopies, 65 JPEG images of documents and 165 JPEGs of photographic images. In addition she has catalogued the John Hazelden, Jerusalem Photograph Album, Desmond Morton (addition), Les Sims and Malcolm Walmsley Collections and with the help of Thomas Stanbury the Reginald Popham Collection. Detailed catalogues have also been created for the Major J D Crowdy and Richard Graves Collections which were already listed briefly in the archive’s main guide. The archive has also played host to six volunteers and four of these volunteers have between them catalogued ten collections. Due to this years’ cataloguing work 16 collections are now open totalling 18 boxes, 10 items and 3 photograph albums and another 3 collections totalling 1 box, 4 volumes and 2 folders that were listed in the main guide now have a detailed catalogues.

Work in the archive this year has been marked by a significant number of volunteers who have done excellent work in the archive. The archive is on the volunteer list of the Society of Archivists (now the Archives and Records Association). Whilst the archive has had two volunteers prior to this year, to have six volunteers in one year is unprecedented. Secondly work in the archive has also been dominated by preparation for the new building, in particular by visits to other new archive repositories as research to inform the design of the new archive reading room and photo store. Thirdly the Charles Butt Project and the Philby Project have also been an important part of the work of the archive over the past year.

The Middle East Centre Archive would like to thank the following volunteers for their generous work in the archive: Sarah Cox, Lucy Driver, Jane Kruz, Elizabeth Moody, Michael Richards and Thomas Stanbury.

During her work in the archive Sarah Cox has catalogued the Frank Edwards Collection, the Peter Sichel Collection and an addition to the John Graham Collection. She has also carried out digitisation work in scanning magic lantern slides and negatives from the Jerusalem and East Mission Collection as well as scanning the Jerusalem Photograph Album Collection and Album 1 in the Jan Ellison Collection.

Lucy Driver has started work on cataloguing the Alex Lamond Collection and we look forward to welcoming her back to the archive when her work permits her to continue with this.

Jane Kruz has catalogued the Hamish Roberts Collection and created a detailed catalogue for the Ina Beasley Collection and is currently working on cataloguing correspondence in the Violet Dickson Collection. Jane Kruz has also digitised one box of glass plate negatives in the Jerusalem and East Mission Collection.

Elizabeth Moody has catalogued the Richard Ward Collection and the Michael Loyd Collection. In addition to this she has also digitised one box of magic lantern slides in the Jerusalem and East Mission Collection and helped with a survey of the archives photographic collection.
Michael Richards, as a retired professional photographer, has volunteered to do reprographics work (digital photography) in the archive. As the archive has not yet been able to afford an A3 scanner, digitisation work has focused upon photographic collections which are small enough to scan on an A4 scanner. However, with the skills and expertise that Michael Richards has brought to the archive, the first steps in digitising paper collections using digital photography have now commenced. So far Michael Richards has worked on the Henry Gurney Collection, the H M Wilson Collection and the Helen Lotbinière Collection. Following advice from Michael Richards, the archive has also made some improvements to its reprographics equipment with the purchase of a camera release.

Thomas Stanbury has catalogued the Eden Tatton-Brown, Pauline Tatton-Brown and Vivian Williams Collections. He has also worked on digitising magic lantern slides in the Jerusalem and East Mission Collection and the Bishop Eric Gordon Collection as well scanning over two albums of photographs in the Jan Ellison Collection. He has also listed the archive’s rolled map collection and packaged the maps in Tyvek, as well as repackaging the Spears Collection in archival boxes and folders. Thomas Stanbury has also done some retro-conversion work in typing up the Arthur Lionel Forster Smith Photographic Collection catalogue as well as part of the Blyth Photograph Collection catalogue.

As can been seen from the above list of activities a significant amount of work, particularly in cataloguing and digitisation, has been done in the archive this year through the generous work of volunteers.

Preparation and research work for the new Middle East Centre Softbridge building has formed a large part of the Archivist’s work over the past year. To collect ideas for the design of the new archive reading room and photo store, the Archivist has visited the Royal Geographical Society Foyle Reading Room, Wolverhampton Archives and UKAEA (photo store). The Archivist has also joined the Major Archive Projects Learning Exchange (MAPLE) which is a group of archivists all involved in new archive building projects and has attended several MAPLE meetings. This research work, in conjunction with work with the architects, has led to improvements in the design and layout of the new archive reading room. The Archivist has also meet with a company to discuss environmental monitoring equipment and has also begun discussions with a company over mobile shelving for the new archive storage areas. This has led to the start of a survey of the Photographic Collection to aid the design of the layout for the new photo store.

The archive has continued to benefit from membership of the Oxford Conservation Consortium (OCC). Over the past year the OCC has worked on the Nina Baird, Sir John Bagot Glubb, Jerusalem and East Mission, Palestine Police Service Record Cards, St John Philby, Arthur Lionel Forster Smith, William Tripe and Richard Ward Collections. This consists of work on 5 bundles of service record cards, 3 photograph albums, 1 pamphlet and 19 sheets. Conservation work of particular note this year is work done on a poster in the Philby Collection advertising trips to Petra from the 1920s and some excellent work on cleaning photograph albums from the Glubb and Smith Collections.

In addition to conservation work, the Oxford Conservation Consortium also put on a two-day preservation workshop on the 23 and 30 June 2009. These workshops focused on collection care and gave useful advice on preservation packaging, handling of books and conservation supplies. As a direct result of these workshops the archive packaged its rolled maps collection in Tyvek and also purchased some smoke sponges which have been used for removing surface dirt from documents.

In addition to the preservation workshops put on by the OCC, the Archivist has attended a number of other training courses this year. In June 2009 the Archivist attended an MLA course ‘First steps into fundraising for archives’. This course lead to the decision to postpone the search for funding for the Glubb project until after the recession. The archive has a large and growing amount of digital data and so in August 2009 the Archivist attended the London Digital Preservation Road Show. This training day included case studies from places already involved in the preservation of digital records and a presentation on the Planets projects and various tools that already exist to help with the preservation and migration of digital data. In March 2010 the Archivist also attended a two-day workshop on ‘Vernacular photography in the Middle East’ in order to gain a greater understanding of the material housed in the archive’s large photographic collection.

In January 2010 the Archivist also successfully completed the Society of Archivist’s Registration Scheme and is now a fully registered member of the society. The Registration Scheme constitutes a formal process of continuing professional development, in which candidates have to submit a portfolio for assessment reflecting on their learning in four areas covering training courses, private study, work achievements and contribution to the profession.

Project work has constituted a large part of work in the archive over the past year. The Philby Project to prepare and copy the St John Philby Collection for the King Abdul Aziz Foundation for Research and Archives has continued. Over the past year another ten boxes of Philby papers have been catalogued consisting of the Newspapers and Journalism section and a large quantity of material relating to the study of inscriptions and archaeology in the Hobbies section as well as a large quantity of newspaper cuttings in the Records section. In order to clear copyright for the business papers the Archivist also visited The National Archives in April 2010 to see if any records survive relating to the liquidation of Mitchell Cotts in 1960. Unfortunately no records survive for this and efforts to clear copyright for the King Abdul Aziz Foundation are still ongoing for the business papers. In March 2010 the microfilming of the Philby Papers recommenced and it is the intention of the archive to finish the microfilming of the Philby Papers by the end of 2010 and for the microfilms to then be digitised.
The Charles Butt Project has also continued. The scanning of 7137 Oman slides has been completed and over 99% of the captions to these images have been typed up. The Archivist wrote a report on the project in November 2009 which was published in the Anglo Omani Society Newsletter. As part of this project an online Oman Photo Gallery has been created which showcases 300 images from the Charles Butt Collection in 12 themed galleries.

With the help of volunteers, a large amount of digitisation work has taken place over the past year. A total of 4510 images have been digitised from 16 photographic collections. Collections with large amounts of digitisation work include the Charles Butt Oman Collection, the Jerusalem and East Mission Magic Lantern Slides, the Sir Andrew Ryan Collection and the Arthur Lionel Forster Smith Collection.

Such digitisation work has also enabled the creation of more online photo galleries. Over the past year another five photo galleries have been put online consisting of 458 images from the Charles Butt, Jerusalem and East Mission, Norman Mayers, Arthur Lionel Forster Smith and H V Weakley Collections.

Putting images online counts as publishing them and so we can only create online photo galleries for images that are out of copyright, for which we have permission of the copyright owner or for which we own copyright. The archive would therefore like to record its thanks to the many donors who have assigned (given) copyright to the archive over the past year. In particular we are grateful to the family of Sir Andrew Ryan for assigning copyright in the Ryan Collection, to General Graham for assigning copyright in his photographs of Oman, to Mrs Huffner for assigning copyright for the Oriental Carpet Manufacturers Collection which includes an outstanding photograph album of Bryan Huffner’s tour of Iran in 1948–1949 and to Judith Gribble for assigning copyright in the Reginald Popham Collection of images of Iraq c1917. We are also grateful to Marianne Barker for assigning copyright in the Barker family photographs of Egypt 1921–1958, which we look forward to receiving in due course.

The archive would also like to record its thanks to a donor, who wishes to remain anonymous, for a donation of £500 which has helped to fund digitisation work as well as enabling the purchase archival folders and packaging for photographs.

The Middle East Centre Library

The summer of 2009 was dedicated to the planning for the new library. A good five months of searching the market and visiting a number of libraries resulted in selecting two cutting-edge products with high quality performance to run the front-line services. The selected solutions of both the self-service circulation using RFID system and the powered mobile shelving will not only be providing the most efficient services to the library users but also the collection will be protected by the sophisticated security system that these products offer.

In October 2009, the library’s funding application was successful and the Soudavar Memorial Foundation awarded the library a generous grant towards the acquisition of materials related to modern Iranian Studies. Since then, the librarian has acquired periodicals and magazines published either during the constitutional revolution or shortly after. These late-19th and the beginning of 20th century publications are primary sources and unique to the Oxford collection as a whole. The new accession list will be posted to the library webpage, in due time. The list includes: Kaveh; Habl al-matin; Sur al-Israfil; Iran Bastan. More will be added to this collection, in due course.

In January 2009, the librarian was elected to chair the MELCOM UK meetings. She has since chaired the 10th Annual Pearson lecture, delivered by Professor Ian Netton, July 2009; the MELCOM winter meeting, January 2010; and the 11th Annual Pearson lecture, delivered by Professor François Deroche, July 2010.
The librarian continued with her responsibilities as the MELCOM International Treasurer for the fifth year, and attended the 32nd annual conference held in Cordoba, 23rd–25th April. The conference coincided with the Icelandic ash cloud effect, which prevented many members attending the conference, including the President and the Secretary of MELCOM International. There, unfolded events laid the responsibility on the MEC librarian to maintain the conference, in that she had to stand as both the acting President and Secretary. The 32nd conference achieved MELCOM International’s primary aim of providing a platform for exchanging views and sharing experience for the librarians in the field, worldwide. Needless to say, without the relentless efforts of the host colleague, Nuria Torres from Casa Arabe, the achievement would not have been possible. The librarian has posted details of the 32nd conference including conference photos to the MELCOM International page.

The book acquisition budget of £8,996.40 was allocated by the University to the MEC library for the academic year 2009/2010. The library continued with its book purchase and maintained its annual subscriptions. The library has added al-Thaqafiyyah to its serials collection.

The library wishes to thank its patrons whose book donations throughout the year have made it possible for the library to expand its collection beyond its available means. Most of all, special thanks goes to the centre’s Director, Dr Eugene Rogan, who made a substantial donation, as ever.

This year, the University, following a hard and long search, selected the Aleph ILS from Ex Libris to replace the current Library Management System GEAC Advance. The transfer of data began in January 2010, and is projected to be completed by January 2011. The first half of 2011 is scheduled for staff training to prepare to go live in the summer of 2011.

The library is grateful to the following DPhil students for their tremendous responsibility and commitment to working in the library during 2009/2010: Pegah Zohouri Haghian, Tania Saeed, Taymour Harding, Parisa Yazdanjoo, and also Adam Berry who worked in the later part of the year.

Governing Body Fellows

DR WALTER ARMBRUST received a grant from the American Research Center in Egypt, to begin next academic year (2010–11), for research on ‘A history of new media in Egypt, 1919 to 1975’. DR C J KERSLAKE, Faculty Fellow and University Lecturer in Turkish, was on sabbatical leave this year, but continued to supervise research students and to be available for consultation on matters relating to Turkish teaching at the Oriental Institute. She completed her work with Dr Aslı Gökse of Boğaziçi University, Istanbul, on Turkish: An Essential Grammar (Routledge), and this is now in press. In December she participated in the First Istanbul Literary Festival, with a paper on the Istanbul essays of the poet Yahya Kemal. The edited volume Turkey’s Engagement with Modernity: Conflict and Change in the Twentieth Century, in which she had collaborated with Dr Kerem Öktem of the European Studies Centre and Dr Philip Robins was published in Palgrave Macmillan’s St Antony’s Series. She began work on a new research project on the views of contemporary Turkish Islamist intellectuals on art and aesthetics, and will present her preliminary findings at a conference on ‘The Turks and Islam’ at Indiana University in September. She has also submitted a proposal to Edinburgh University Press for a volume on modern Turkish literature in the New Edinburgh Islamic Surveys series.

PROFESSOR TARIQ RAMADAN, Faculty Fellow and Professor of Contemporary Islamic Studies, started to teach ‘Islamic Political Movements and Western Muslims’ (as well as ‘Contemporary Islamic Issues’ at the Faculty of Theology).

His book, What I believe, was published by Oxford University Press in October (already translated into 11 languages, including Turkish and Arabic). He travelled in many countries to lecture on the book or to talk about contemporary Islamic – academic, political, social, economic, cultural and ethical – issues: 18 European countries (including Turkey and Eastern Europe), Canada, the United States, Australia, Japan, Morocco, Malaysia, Dubai, Sharjah, Lebanon and Qatar. In July he convened an important international conference on Muslims in Multicultural Societies in Singapore, co-organised by MUIS from the Singaporean Government and Oriental Faculty of Oxford, the Centre of Excellence in Melbourne and the Singaporean University.

He travelled to Qatar in January and March (with Dr Eugene Rogan) to set the framework of the starting academic relationship between the Qatar Faculty of Islamic Studies, his Chair and Oxford fellows interested in contemporary Islamic issues.

He took part in many TV and radio programs around the world (BBC and BBC World), CNN, al-Jazeera, CRB, NPR, France2, France3, France24 and other European, American, Arabic, and Asian TV and radio channels in English, Arabic and French. He wrote 32 opinion pieces for various newspapers around the world.
DR PHILIP ROBINS, Faculty Fellow and Reader in Middle East Politics, demitted from his position as Junior Proctor of the University towards the end of March. He immediately went on research leave for a term, and has begun a new book project on narcotics in the modern Middle East, with the generous assistance of a British Academy award. Philip Robins is the recent author of a new introductory book on the region, aimed at undergraduate and Master’s students: The Middle East: A Beginners’ Guide (Oneworld, Oxford, 2009). Last November, Dr Robins substituted for the Chancellor at the 2nd EU–Washington Forum, focused on President Obama’s first 12 months in office. Dr Robins has contributed a chapter, entitled ‘The Middle East and Illicit Drugs: A Forgotten Region?’ in a forthcoming volume, edited by Julie Buxton and entitled The Politics of Illegal Drugs, to be published by Routledge in 2010. Dr Robins continued to serve on the Governing Body of the British Institute in Ankara, the BIAA, one of the British Academy’s research centres in the eastern Mediterranean.

DR EUGENE ROGAN, Faculty Fellow and University Lecturer in the Modern History of the Middle East, continued as Director of the Middle East Centre.

In September he convened a major conference in Christ Church on ‘The making of the Modern Middle East’. He gave a paper to the workshop organised by Avi Shlaim and Roger Louis on the 1967 War and contributed a paper on the impact of the Yemen War on Egypt’s war preparedness in 1967.

His book, The Arabs: A History, was published in November to critical acclaim. He lectured on the book at the LSE, the Embassy of the Kingdom of Morocco in London, the Council on Foreign Relations in New York, Harvard University, the University of Maryland, the World Bank, the Middle East Institute and the National History Centre in Washington, DC, and the University of Texas in Austin. He addressed Oxford alumni in New York and Cambridge, Massachusetts, and shared a panel with the Chancellor, Lord Patten, at the Oxford Alumni reunion in New York City. He made a number of media appearances, including Radio 4’s Start the Week with Andrew Marr, Al-Jazeera Arabic and English services, the Charlie Rose Show, and Good Morning Joe, as well as numerous radio programs in the US, UK and Europe. The book has already appeared in Dutch translation, with further translations contracted in Arabic, Turkish, Spanish, Italian and Norwegian.

He travelled to Beirut in September to take part in a conference jointly organised by the MEC and the Centre for Lebanese Studies; he attended the Abu Dhabi Book Fair; and as part of ongoing work between the MEC and the Qatar Faculty of Islamic Studies, he attended a meeting in Doha with Professor Tariq Ramadan.

He contributed an opinion piece on Israeli settlements for The Financial Times, and a number of book reviews to The Financial Times, The Times Literary Supplement and The Guardian. He is now working on his next book, which will examine the First World War in the Middle East.

DR MICHAEL WILLIS has continued to develop events and studies associated with the King Mohamed VI Fellowship in Moroccan and Mediterranean Studies which he holds.

Dr Willis spoke at a number of different institutions and conferences in Britain and abroad during the academic year. These included Yale University, the Council for the Advancement of Arab British Understanding (CAABU), the Moroccan National Library in Rabat and the Middle East Studies Association (MESA) in Boston.

He also organised two research workshops on Modern Morocco, one held at St Antony’s in March and the other at Al Akhawayn University in Ifrane, Morocco, in April which brought together primarily younger researchers from Oxford and Morocco. He spent three weeks in Morocco in April conducting interviews and gathering material for his research.

Dr Willis was on sabbatical leave during Michaelmas term 2010 during which he continued work on a book on the comparative politics of Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco. He also completed a chapter on Islamic political parties in the Maghreb for the Oxford Handbook for Islam in Politics (OUP 2011).
Emeritus Fellows

DR DEREK HOPWOOD continued as a gradually aging Emeritus Fellow. He made a return trip to Lebanon after many years' absence to attend a conference on travellers' views of Near Eastern society in the 19th century. He contributed a paper on the Russian cleric Porfirii Uspenskii and his diary of his travels. This will be published in the conference volume. He also completed a paper for the Festschrift for Paul Auchterlonie of Exeter University on his retirement. This described certain views on the reasons for travel to the Middle East. The volume was presented to Paul at the BRISMES Conference in Manchester. Finally, the Arabic translation of his study Sexual Encounters in the Middle East was published in the Middle East. He continues to sing and write music for the local choir and to write a monthly column on cookery for the village newsletter.

The research will be carried out during 2010 and 2011 and involves the participation of an advisory group of academics from Khartoum University and the training of a group of students to undertake a survey in various parts of Sudan. It is hoped that the results of the research will be communicated during two conferences to be held in Khartoum and Oxford, and will be published.

He contributed to the supervision of postgraduate students undertaking research on Sudan. He continued his research on the anthropology of northern Sudan and the works of Peter Lienhardt in the Arab Shaikhdoms of the Gulf.

With Dr Kerem Oktem, she taught an option course in the MPhil Modern Middle Eastern Studies (‘Cities and societies in the Middle East’). She supervised an MPhil Thesis in Politics on the Euromed policy ‘Union for the Mediterranean’.
RUSSIAN AND EURASIAN STUDIES

The Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre

With a record number of students coming through the centre’s new ‘front door’ in the Main Building, and a very full programme of events, we made excellent use of our recently extended and refurbished premises. The remodelled Reading Room saw more out-of-hours use for events that spanned the full range of issues in the large region we cover. For a fortnight in the early spring, the Reading Room hosted an exhibition of paintings and lithographs by the Russian artist and writer, Maxim Kantor, who launched his show with a talk on the perennial travails of the intelligentsia. In the late summer we were able – by assembling the ingeniously designed reading desks into a long conference table – to accommodate the 30 participants who attended the seminar on contemporary Turkmenistan. Central Asian studies and cultural developments in Russia are among the areas in which we plan to expand the centre’s activities. RESC is working closely with the Oxford Society for the Caspian and Central Asia to raise funds to establish Research Fellowships for the study of these regions. The centre anticipates securing funding in the near future which will significantly enhance our activities in the field of Russian culture. With the support of our ever-helpful Campaign Committee, we continue to explore sources of funding for both Ukrainian and Caucasian studies. Co-ordination of these and other RESC matters will be managed from next year by Paul Chaisty to whom Alex Pravda will soon be passing the baton of Centre Director, in order to take his turn as College Sub-Warden.

The centre’s ‘gang of four’ Governing Body Fellows was once again afforced by our longer-term Visiting Fellows: Tina Jennings, Julie Newton, and Norman Davies, who was elected an Honorary Fellow of the college in June. Christopher Davis (Wolfson), chair of the management committee on Russian and East European Studies, became an associate member of RESC. We also had the benefit of having with us – as a Visiting Fellow for the academic year – Timothy Colton, director of the Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies at Harvard. Our CEELBAS Postdoctoral Fellow, Robert Pyrah, who has contributed much to the research and teaching life of RESC over the last three years, is leaving us for pastures new in Cambridge. Our Emeritus Fellows, as is clear from their entries, continue to be extremely productive, taking full advantage of the time made available by ‘retirement’.

This year brought the sad news of the deaths of two Emeriti, Ronald Hingley and Richard Kindersley, both of whom made major contributions to the life of the centre from the 1960s to the late 1980s.

Seminars, talks and workshops

The Monday seminar continued to attract large audiences and to serve as the main intellectual venue in Oxford for those interested in the history, politics, and economics of the region. In Michaelmas term Robert Service and Jane Caplan, in one of the growing number of activities organised jointly by the RESC and the European Studies Centre, convened a series on ‘1989: twenty years after’. Hilary term saw sessions on ‘Business, politics and the state in the post-Communist world’, convened by Paul Chaisty, Tina Jennings, and Alex Pravda. In Trinity term, Carol Leonard – jointly with fellow economists Antoni Chawluk (Mansfield) and Christopher Davis (Wolfson) – organised sessions which considered ‘Economic developments and population welfare in Russia and Eastern Europe’ (details of all three series are given at the end of this section).

In addition to the weekly Monday seminar fare, there was a particularly rich a la carte menu this year. In November, Andrei Markevich (New Economic School, Moscow) gave us a talk on ‘Career concerns in a political hierarchy: a case of regional leaders in Soviet Russia’. In the same month Igor Yurgens (Director of the Institute of Contemporary Development in Moscow and Vice-President of the Russian Union of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs), one of the most outspoken advocates of more liberal and open strategies of modernisation, delivered the 2010 Elliott Lecture on ‘Russia: the interdependence of economic and foreign policy’. In January, Kakha Bendukidze (former Economy Minister of Georgia) gave us a very thoughtful and insightful talk on ‘Business and politics in Georgia’. At the end of that month, Alexander Pivovarsky (European Bank for Reconstruction and Development) discussed ‘Economic policy developments in Ukraine’. In February, Vladimir Pastukhov, a lawyer based in Moscow and London, former adviser to the Russian Constitutional Court and currently a member of the Heritage Capital legal team, spoke on ‘Police “reform” and the collapse of the “regular state” in Russia’. Towards the end of the month, John Beyer (Senior Associate Member) organised a joint RESC–ESC seminar on ‘The European Union and its Eastern neighbours’. In March, Timothy Colton gave us an analysis of ‘The Ukrainian election and the future of Ukrainian-Russian relations’. Later that month RESC sponsored, jointly with Wolfson, a CEELBAS postgraduate student conference on ‘Russia and Eastern Europe in the 21st century: looking back, looking forward’. A fortnight in April saw an exhibition in the Reading Room of the work of Maxim Kantor (artist-in-residence at the Department of Politics and International Relations) which was launched with a reception and talk by the painter and writer on ‘The intelligentsia as a motor and victim of perestroika’. In early May, John Beyer convened a seminar on ‘Prospects for the Caucasus’. Later that month there was a joint RESC–ESC sponsored talk by Lynne Viola (University of Toronto) on ‘The legacy of collectivisation: from dekulakisation to the Great Terror’. Towards the end of May one of our doctoral students, Harun Yilmaz, co-convened with Gayle Lonergan a one-day symposium, ‘Writing histories: constructing communities’, which looked at the construction of national histories in the former Soviet Union and the Middle East. In June, Rory Stewart, MP, gave the 2010 Paul Bergne Memorial Lecture on ‘War, states and intervention’. Finally, in early July, John Beyer convened a workshop on ‘Turkmenistan and the world’.

Doctoral Bursaries

The Elliott Bursary was awarded to Harun Yilmaz, and the Brown Bursary to Alessandro Iandolo.

Library

As our extensive collection of Soviet and post-Soviet Russian newspapers was making the splendid new basement stacks bulge at the seams (to near-bursting point), we were faced with the painful prospect of having to carry out a purge. After carefully weighing all the options, we managed to decide to dispose of those runs available on-line or in hard copy elsewhere in Oxford. It was a long and difficult process for those paper traditionalists among us who have little confidence in the longevity of digital archives. Without the wise guidance and persistence of our Librarian/Administrator, Richard Ramage, we would have never made the difficult decisions necessary to create space for new acquisitions. He worked very effectively throughout the year to create space and order in the basement area. And he also found the time to keep us and the wider scholarly community abreast of events about the region in Oxford and further afield.

Richard Ramage would like to thank the following who donated publications to the library this year: Paul Chaisty, Oleg Dolzhenko, The European Humanities University of Lithuania, Alexey Gromyko, Nadiya Kravets, the Slavic Research Center, Hokkaido University, and Marina Samsonova.

Governing Body Fellows

DR PAUL CHAISTY, University Lecturer in Russian Politics. During this year, Dr Chaisty continued to research, write and teach Russian Politics. He prepared for publication articles and book chapters on interest group lobbying, party organisations, the representation of ethnic minorities and the Federal Assembly. This research was also presented in research seminars and at conferences. Dr Chaisty gave papers at the RESC Monday seminar, the universities of Cambridge and Birmingham, and at the European Centre for Minority Issues, Flensburg, Germany. His research has also moved in a comparative direction. Together with colleagues from the African Studies and Latin American Studies centres – Dr Nic Cheeseman and Dr Tim Power – Dr Chaisty started preparatory work on a research project into coalitional presidentialism. This project seeks to examine how presidents win legislative support in the fragmented multiparty systems of Africa, Latin America and the former Soviet Union. Together with the co-investigators, Dr Chaisty organised a two-day conference and workshop on comparative presidential-legislative relations in November, which included leading authorities such as Joel Barkan, John Carey, Robert Elgie, Staffan Lindberg and Scott Morgenstern. The conference generated ideas that formed the basis for a major research grant application.

DR CAROL SCOTT LEONARD, University Lecturer in Regional Studies of the Post-Communist States (Russian Federation, Central and Eastern Europe) and Fellow of St Antony’s since January 1997, is engaged in teaching and research on regional aspects of the transition from communism, with a focus on Russian economic history, privatisation and agrarian reform, science and technology, networking, and regional economic growth.
She serves on the college’s Management Executive Team as Financial Delegate. She also teaches undergraduate courses, including Social Science Statistics for the Department of Economics and the Geography of Post-Socialist Central and Eastern Europe for the Honours School of Geography. During the year 2009–2010, she organised a panel session at the meetings of American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies and a conference to take place in November 2010 on ‘Privatisation in Russia, 1991–1996: decisions and outcomes’. She continued to serve as a consultant for the doctoral studies programme in Innovation Management at the Eurasian National University in Astana, Kazakhstan, and for the doctoral programme at the Graduate School of Management and Economics of St Petersburg University. Dr Leonard completed her book, Russian Agrarian Reform: The Road from Serfdom (forthcoming, Cambridge University Press), and began work on Privatization in Russia, 1991–1994 (forthcoming Routledge). She also published several articles on institutional change in modern Russia, including one co-authored with Brigitte Granville, published in World Development, and a chapter co-authored with Jonas Ljungberg on the standard of living in late 19th century for the Economic History of Modern Europe (Cambridge University Press).

DR ALEX PRAVDA, Soude-Salameno Fellow and University Lecturer in Russian and East European Politics, continued as Director of the Centre and as joint Director of Graduate Studies for the MSc and MPhil in REES. While on leave in Michaelmas term, he left the RESC Directorship in the able hands of Dr Paul Chaisty. With Dr Chaisty and Dr Tina Jennings, he convened the Monday seminar series in Hilary term on ‘Business, politics, and the state in the post-communist world’. He continued to take part as Associate Fellow in the Russia and CIS programme at the Royal Institute of International Affairs (Chatham House). In October, he gave a talk at the RESC Monday seminar on Soviet policy in Eastern Europe in 1989 and spoke on the same subject at the British Academy symposium, ‘The collapse of communism in Europe: a re-examination 20 years after’. In November he presented a paper on ‘Soviet policy and East-Central Europe, 1988–89’ in Prague at the Czech Academy of Sciences conference ‘Dropping, maintaining and breaking the Iron Curtain: the Cold War and East-Central Europe 20 years later’. He received from the Czech Prime Minister the Karel Kramar (first Prime Minister of Czechoslovakia) medal for his contribution to the study of the international politics of East-Central Europe. His chapter on ‘The collapse of the Soviet Union, 1990–1991’ was published in M T Leffler and O A Westad, eds, The Cambridge History of the Cold War. Vol III Endings (Cambridge University Press). An article (co-authored with Ilaria Poggiolini) ‘Britain in Europe in the 1980s: East and West. Introduction’ appeared in Journal of European Integration History, 16:1 (2010).

PROFESSOR ROBERT SERVICE, Professor of Russian History, spent summer 2009 in the Hoover Institution archives working on his book on Russia and the West in 1917–1921. It was the calm before a bit of a squall. When Trotsky: A Biography was published in the autumn it provoked controversy among British and American Trotskyists who picketed and noisily intervened at talks. Whereas Leninists lie low and Stalinists lower, the Trotskyist movement attempts a public imitation of intellectual vivacity. Trotskyists were annoyed with the book’s examination of policies and attitudes which Trotsky and his early biographers traditionally ignored. To that extent it was a useful discussion – and at least it was conducted in the open and face to face.

Another critic of the book, a fellow Sovietologist and not even a crypto-Trotskyist, squatted under the dank foliage of Amazon.co.uk’s anonymity; and when pressed to admit who he was, he responded with legal threats. This squalid affair has yet to run its course. It is a sad reflection on the British libel laws that such an attempt at intimidation of a fellow scholar could happen at all.

On a pleasanter note, the Trotsky biography won the Duff Cooper literary prize in February 2010. Professor Service also gave a conspectual analysis of Western historiography of the USSR in the annual Creighton Lecture for the Institute of Historical Research in November 2009. He spoke at literary festivals in Glasgow and Oxford. He drafted several chapters of his next book, concentrating on the interaction of Soviet Russia and the Western Allies in matters of security, ideology and economic recovery. The third revised edition of his Penguin History of Modern Russia, from Tsarism to the Twenty-First Century came out in October 2009. He wrote and broadcasted for the UK and US media, in particular engaging in an online debate on Trotsky with Christopher Hitchens.

The year’s Master’s and undergraduate students were a very lively and rewarding bunch and the Michaelmas term seminar series on the year 1989 in the USSR and Europe, co-convened with Professor Jane Caplan, attracted a large audience for its speakers.

Robert Service again convened the Visiting Parliamentary Fellowship seminar series in Hilary Term with David Marquand. He served on the History Faculty Research Committee, the Oxford Historical Monographs Editorial Committee, the Management Committee of Russian and East European Studies and the Modern History Standing Committee of the British Academy.

Next year will be quieter.

Emeritus Fellows

PROFESSOR ARCHIE BROWN, Emeritus Fellow and Emeritus Professor of Politics, gave lectures in the United States – Yale, Harvard, New York (Columbia University, the Council for Foreign Relations, and the James Chace Memorial Lecture at Bard College), SAIS, and the Pritzker Military Library, Chicago; Australia (Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide); Russia (at the Gorbachev Foundation, with Mikhail Gorbachev presiding), the Netherlands; Belgium; and Norway. His Washington talk was jointly arranged by Antonian Bruce Parrott of SAIS and the Washington Antonians, especially Thomas Boghardt. His talk at Yale, hosted by Paul Kennedy (OA), entitled ‘The fall of the Wall and the fall of Communism: why – and why 1989?’, was given on the 20th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall. Archie Brown also gave four public lectures on ‘Communism reappraised’ at National Chengchi University, Taiwan, in April. His publications included chapters in the Cambridge History of the Cold War and in Stephen Fortescue (ed), Russian Politics from Lenin to Putin. His articles appeared in History Today and the Journal of European Integration History. Professor Brown’s book, The Rise and Fall of Communism, was published in a Vintage paperback in 2010. It has already appeared in German and Dutch and is being translated into Japanese, Hebrew, Russian, Estonian, Czech and Portuguese.

PROFESSOR MICHAEL KASER, Emeritus Fellow, continued as Honorary Professor at the European Research Institute, University of Birmingham, as well as remaining Associate Fellow of Templeton College. In Oxford, he was on the SEESOX Committee, the Pluscarden Committee, and the Oxford Intelligence Group and completed his term as Honorary Treasurer of the Oxford Energy Policy Club. He was on the committee for the college celebration of St Antony’s Day. He remained Honorary President of the British Association of Former UN Civil Servants, and on the Board of the Annual Register, of the Slavonic and East European Review and on the International Advisory Board of the Central Asian Survey.

DR HAROLD SHUKMAN remained chairman of the editorial board of East European Jewish Affairs. He published Russkie evrei i prizyv v Britanii (1917) (Russian Jews and Conscription in Britain (1917)), based on his recent book War or Revolution, in Russkii Sbornik: issledovaniya po istorii Rossii, vol VIII, Moscow 2010. He also wrote several reviews for Times Higher Education.

Honorary Fellows

In 2009–10, PROFESSOR NORMAN DAVIES was happily involved in activities both of the RESC and the ESC. Both centres provide a rich fare, but in his view the college could improve its coverage of countries once in the Soviet Bloc and now in the European Union. In November, he presented a lecture on ‘Communism still in their heads’, examining the strange survival of Soviet era mind-sets often among staunch anti-communists. He targeted Poland’s Law and Justice Party headed by the Kaczynski twins. He greatly appreciated the Parliamentary Seminar on ‘Politics and Religion’.

Academic visits included lectures at the University of Riga, and a trip in April to Russia, where Professor and Mrs Davies attended the commemoration organised by premiers Putin and Tusk in the Katyn Forest near Smolensk.

He serves as chairman of advisers to the nascent Museum of World War Two in Gdansk and as a committee member of the European ‘House of History’ in Brussels.
Most time, however, has been spent revising a book, Vanished Kingdoms (Penguin, November 2010). As usual, Professor Davies interweaves the histories of Eastern and Western Europe. Studies of Aragon, Burgundy and Strathclyde feature alongside Lithuania, Galicia, Montenegro and ‘the ultimate vanishing act’ of the USSR.

Research Fellows

Visiting Fellows and Associate Members

MR JOHN BEYER, Senior Associate Member (formerly Foreign and Commonwealth Office), has been undertaking research on the approach of the European Union to former Soviet states, in association with the European Studies Centre. He co-organised, with Jonathan Scheele and Graham Watson of the ESC, a seminar focussing on Ukraine, Moldova and Belarus, bringing over the senior Ukrainian official for EU affairs, Vadym Triukhan, to give a regional perspective. He convened a second seminar to address a range of contemporary issues in Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia, the other three countries in the EU’s Eastern Partnership. He chaired the Caucasus session of the major SEESOX/ESC conference on Turkey. In support of the centre’s aim of providing more coverage of central Asia, he organised a round table on Turkmenistan, centred on a visiting group headed by Bayramahedov Resulberti, a member of the Turkmen parliament. A teach-in on EU issues for visitors from Moldova under the John Smith Memorial Trust programme returned him to his initial interest, in Moldova (having been British Ambassador to Moldova 2006–9); as did the paper he published in the St Antony’s International Review. The seminars have adopted a multi-disciplinary approach and aimed to bring in speakers from outside to complement the expertise available in Oxford.

PROFESSOR TIMOTHY COLTON considers himself lucky enough to have a fully funded sabbatical year in academic year 2010–11. His project was on ‘Russia and the rest: conflict and accommodation in the Post-Soviet space’. The goal was to understand the determinants of Russian influence in its former imperial domain and the conditions, if any, under which Russia develops co-operative relations with the states around it. He stumbled across some counterintuitive patterns – for example, that Russia may have more impact on more democratic countries in the region, despite its own lack of enthusiasm for democracy – but these need more study in future. He found St Antony’s a collegial host for the research activity. The research took Colton on extended trips to Russia, Ukraine, Georgia, Estonia, Kazakhstan and Moldova, which absorbed rather more of the time than he had originally intended. He is most grateful for the use of facilities and the access to so accomplished and diverse an academic community.

DR TINA JENNINGS is completing her book manuscript for Oxford University Press on the subject of business and politics in contemporary Russia. She acted as co-convenor of the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre's 'Business and Politics' seminar series in Hilary term, together with Dr Alex Pravda and Dr Paul Chaisty. In Michaelmas term, she gave a talk on Putin's Russia for the Warden's College lunchtime seminar series. She is actively involved in fundraising for the centre's proposed fellowships in Georgian and Caucasian studies. In April, she attended, as an invited guest, the Congress of the Union of Industrialists and Entrepreneurs (RSPP), held in Moscow every four years.

DR HIROMI MIZOKAMI started her visiting fellowship as a Senior Associate at St Antony’s Russian and Eurasian Centre in June 2009. Her research has been focused on British immigration policy towards immigrants from East Europe and her present interest is in the attitude of local women towards these immigrants. She has conducted research about two women’s groups which were involved in the resettlement process of these Eastern Europeans immediately after the Second World War.

In Hilary term, she organised an international conference, ‘Immigration and national identity in British history – Europe, Empire and Commonwealth’, inviting speakers from the UK, USA and Poland. She also made a presentation at this conference, titled ‘Home and national identity: the role of women’s groups in resettling foreign workers during the Attlee years’, using historical materials she collected during her stay in Oxford. She left the UK at the end of March 2010, and will continue her research in Japan.

DR JULIE NEWTON, Visiting Fellow of the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre and Associate Professor in the Division of Politics and Government at the American University of Paris, supervised the writing of MPhil students’ theses at Oxford. In addition, she participated in numerous symposiums. In October 2009, she was a panellist and speaker at the British Academy conference entitled, ‘The collapse of Communism in Europe: a re-examination 20 years after’; in February 2010, she spoke on Russian attitudes towards the EU’s Eastern Partnership policies at a seminar under the auspices of St Antony’s European Studies and RESC Centres, entitled ‘The European Union and its eastern neighbours – what kind of partnership?’. In March, Julie presented a paper entitled ‘Russia and the new Euro-Atlantic security initiative’ at a panel discussion on Russian foreign policy at the BASSEES annual Conference in Cambridge; in April, she was a discussant for the panel, ‘Transnational political influences: how separable are IR and comparative politics?’ at the Political Science Association’s annual conference in Edinburgh; and in July, she presented a paper about West European reactions to New Thinking and Perestroika on a panel entitled, ‘Perestroika and New Thinking reassessed’ at the ICCEES VIII World Congress in Stockholm.

She published a co-edited book with William Tompson called, Institutions, Ideas and Leadership in Russian Politics, St Antony’s Series, Palgrave Macmillan, 2010, for which she was the main contributor, and is working on a book on Russia, Europe and European security since 1985. In the spring of 2011, she will teach a course on Russian Politics at AUP as well as continue to supervise Oxford MPhil students.
DR ROBERT PYRAH completes his three-year stint as a CEELBAS Postdoctoral Fellow at St Antony’s College in 2010. He leaves to join a major research project at Cambridge under Dr Alexander Etkind, on memory politics in the East Central European region. The theme is very much in the spirit of his teaching and research for REES while at Oxford and crops up in his jointly edited volume Re-Contextualising East Central European History (Oxford, Legenda), due later this year. Robert jointly remodelled the core course on culture for MSc and MPhil students, ensuring its relevance to otherwise perplexed economists and political scientists. He continued his work on the 20th century cultural history of L’viv, Ukraine, publishing translated articles in Russian and Ukrainian, and making strides towards a completed manuscript on the topic, due next year. A CEELBAS-sponsored conference in Ukraine on his initiative in February 2010 yielded fine contributions from younger scholars based within the target region, and it is hoped that a publication will follow. He would like to thank his colleagues at St Antony’s for a richly enjoyable three years, and will miss the Monday seminars and dinners in particular.

DR SHAMIL MIDKHATOVICH YENIKEYEFF is a Research Fellow at the Oxford Institute for Energy Studies (OIES) and a Senior Associate Member at the Russian and Eurasian Studies Centre, St Antony’s College, University of Oxford. In 2009–2010 he continued to run ‘The geopolitics of energy’ lecture series under the joint auspices of the Oxford Institute for Energy Studies and St Antony’s.

During this academic year, Dr Yenikeyeff presented at various academic conferences and workshops, as well as international energy and investment conferences, including the Eurasian Energy Forum, KIOGE, Euromoney International Investment Forum, Kazakhstan Growth Forum, and Chatham House’s conference on Central Asia.

He also co-authored a monograph and a chapter on natural resource management in Russia with Valery Kryukov and Anatoly Tokarev, which will be published in English in 2011.

Dr Yenikeyeff’s publications also appeared in a number of industry and academic journals.

VISITING PARLIAMENTARY FELLOWSHIP

The theme for this year’s Visiting Parliamentary Fellowship seminar series, ‘God and Caesar’ came out of a discussion involving Visiting Fellows, Lord David Trimble and Baroness Kishwer Falkner together with the Warden, Professor Margaret Macmillan, and co-convenors Professor David Marquand and Professor Robert Service.

As with most previous series of the Fellowship, each week took a particular country or region where features of the theme are having a deep impact on politics and society. Our Visiting Fellows were supremely well qualified to contribute. David Trimble received the Nobel prize for his efforts in peace-making in Northern Ireland; Kishwer Falkner, coming from a Muslim background, has done much to highlight problems of religion and identity in contemporary Britain. Both of them have written extensively on the general theme we chose. The series would have been much harder to organise but for David Marquand’s imaginative ideas about speakers as well as his stoical endurance of last-minute adjustments to line-ups. When every session is aimed at putting on three speakers, including parliamentarians under the authority of party whips, it is never possible to know exactly how things will turn out on the night.

The series started with a survey of the challenges of secularism. We then moved on to countries and regions. As ever, the debates were different from week to week depending on the specific political circumstances addressed by the speakers. The audience too changed from week to week. It was good to be able to draw on several Antonians as contributors. The Visiting Parliamentary Fellowship is one of the forums for the entire college to get together. Discussion in the lecture theatre, and afterwards in Hall, is never less than bracing. This year our theme was tackled with the appropriate sensitivity – and it was striking how many speakers of opposing stances found some ground for agreement. Our thanks go to Adele Biagi for the administration of the series.

The series sounded an alert about the dangers posed by the political exploitation of religious faiths around the world. At the same time it offered hope that religious leaders in some countries have shown bravery in rendering to Caesar only those things that are his due.

The Pluscarden Programme for the Study of Global Terrorism and Intelligence

The programme has had another successful year and has just completed its fifth year, continuing with seminars and dinners each term. Dr Steve Tsang continues as Director of the programme with the support of the 15 further members of the Advisory Committee and four on the Management Committee. Dr Faisal Devji was duly elected to join both committees during Trinity term.

In Michaelmas term Professor Bruce Hoffman, Professor of Security Studies at Georgetown University and Visiting Fellow at All Souls College, gave the first seminar on ‘Recent evidence of Jihadi radicalisation in the US: an assessment’. The second seminar was given by The Rt Hon Kim Howells, MP and the Chairman of the Intelligence and Security Committee, titled ‘Ensuring accountability without undermining national security: parliamentary supervision of the intelligence services’.

One seminar took place in Hilary term and this was given by Sir Hugh Orde. Sir Hugh is President of the Association of Chief Police Officers, and before taking on his current position he served as the Chief Constable of the Police Service of Northern Ireland. The subject of his talk was ‘Resurgence of terrorist threats in Northern Ireland: how seriously should we take it?’. The Department of Education and the Pluscarden Programme joined together in Hilary term, to put on a Comparative Education and Security Studies seminar series titled ‘Education: promoting radicalisation or countering extremism?’. Dr David Johnson, Dr Steve Tsang and Ms Tania Saeed all from St Antony’s, organised the eight week seminar series. Professor Lynn Davies (University of Birmingham) spoke on ‘Prevent, protect or pillory? Strategies to counter extremism’, followed by talks given by Dr David Johnson (St Antony’s) ‘Schools and the citizenship curriculum too wishy-washy to combat radicalisation?’; Professor Tariq Ramadan (St Antony’s) ‘Religious and political causes of radicalisation; the way forward?’; Ms Tania Saeed (St Antony’s) ‘The subversive youth: radicalisation in higher education institutions in Britain’; Dr David Tyrer (Liverpool John Moores University) ‘Countering Muslim student radicalisation: beyond political governance in the multicultural university’; Mr Maajid Nawaz (Quilliam Foundation) ‘Intellectual hijacking: the Islamist policy of targeting academic institutions’; Dr Masooda Bana (Department of International Development, University of Oxford) ‘Radicalising or de-radicalising: role of madrassa education in South Asia’; Dr Tahir Abbas (University of Exeter) ‘Radical politics and Islamic extremism: intersections of conflicting identities among British Muslims’.

Two seminars were held in Trinity term in consecutive weeks. The first was given by Professor John Grieve, Independent Monitoring Commission for Northern Ireland, on ‘Pre-empting attacks and winning hearts and minds: where to strike a balance?’. The following week, Dr Faisal Devji, University Reader in Modern South Asian History here at St Antony’s, spoke on ‘Terrorism Indian style’.

In the course of the year, the programme received a generous commitment from the US State Department and the National Intelligence Council to support the annual Pluscarden Conference, on ‘The future of international co-operation in countering violent extremism’, scheduled for October 2010.
Geopolitics of Energy Lecture Series

In Michaelmas 2009 the Geopolitics of Energy Lecture Series continued under the auspices of the Oxford Institute for Energy Studies and St Antony’s College. The series, organised by Dr Shamil Midkhatovich Yenikeyeff of the Oxford Institute for Energy Studies (OIES) and St Antony’s College, focused on the role played by geopolitics in the energy sector.

The purpose of the seminar series is to inform participants about recent and future geopolitical and economic developments and their potential impact on international energy markets. The key aim of the seminar is to promote an in-depth understanding of driving forces and processes in global energy markets with a focus on domestic and international political actions, economic policies and corporate strategies. The series seeks to present a balanced approach to the geopolitics of energy with most of the lectures given by high-level guest speakers with special expertise and experience in the energy field.

The first seminar of Michaelmas 2009 featured Mr André Mernier, Secretary-General of the Energy Charter Secretariat, who spoke on ‘The future of the Energy Charter Treaty after the 2009 Russia-Ukraine Crisis’. Professor Richard Sakwa of the University of Kent gave the second lecture, examining the Yukos Affair and its consequences.

Professor Michael Bradshaw of Leicester University focused on the relations between ‘The Kremlin, the National Champions and the international oil companies’. Dr Yury K Shafranik, Chairman of the Union of Oil and Gas Producers of Russia, presented a view on resource nationalism in Russia. Dr Shamil Yenikeyeff of OIES and St Antony’s examined ‘The three faces of Russian energy policy: Yel’tsin-Putin-Medvedev’.

During Hilary 2010, Dr Simon Pirani of OIES gave a lecture, entitled ‘Russia’s natural resources: Curse? Weapon? Both?’.

In Trinity 2010, Mr Tom Bower, author of The Squeeze: Oil, Money and Greed in the 21st Century, presented his view on motivations behind oil prices.

The seminar is designed as an ongoing event with lectures taking place every Wednesday (starting at 5pm) during term time. It is held at the Nissan Lecture Theatre, St Antony’s College. The seminar has already attracted a large number of participants, made up of Oxford students and academics, as well as professionals from the energy sector and financial institutions in the City of London.

Warden’s Visiting Fellow

PROFESSOR ALEX DANCHEV, Warden’s Visiting Fellow, beavered away on his book, a biography of the painter Paul Cézanne (1839–1906) – an effort to treat Cézanne as a world historical figure in the same league as Marx or Freud or Einstein, and as the exemplary artist-creator of the modern period. He also completed an anthology of artists’ manifestos of the last hundred years, investigating their political (often revolutionary) leanings, as well as their artistic concerns. 100 Artists’ Manifestos will be published in Penguin Modern Classics in 2011. In between times he organised a workshop on ‘Art and War and Terror’, with an international group of artists, curators and scholars, and an admixture of students from the college. He published a collection of essays on the same theme and co-edited a special issue of the Review of International Studies on art and war.

IN MEMORIAM:

Dr John Campbell September 2009

The college was sad to announce the death of Dr John Campbell, former Governing Body and Emeritus Fellow, on Saturday 5 September 2009. Dr Campbell was a Senior Research Fellow at St Antony's from 1958 to 1967, a Governing Body Fellow from 1967 to 1990 and a regular visitor to the college as Emeritus Fellow from 1990 onwards.

Richard Kindersley May 2010

Obituary by Professor Archie Brown

Richard Kindersley, who came to St Antony’s as a Fellow in 1967, taught in the college for 22 years, and was an Emeritus Fellow from 1989, died in the John Radcliffe Hospital, Oxford, on 30 May 2010. He was not only a very able, although self-effacing, scholar, he was also one of the last surviving British naval officers who served in North Russia during the Second World War.

Richard Kerr Kindersley was born in London on 9 September 1922. An only child, he spent most of his first eight years in Egypt where his father, also called Richard, was a civil engineer. His mother, Elaine Belmont, had been a secretary to Philip Kerr, Lord Lothian, at the Paris Peace talks following World War One. Lord Lothian became Richard’s godfather and was the source of his middle name.

As a child in Alexandria, Richard acquired a passion for sailing. From Sunningdale School, he was awarded a scholarship to Eton where, unusually, he was both Captain of Boats and coxed for Eton at Henley. His sporting prowess was accompanied by academic excellence and he was awarded a Classical Scholarship to Trinity College, Cambridge. He spent the 1941–42 academic year at Cambridge, completing Part I of the Classical Tripos.

In 1942 Richard joined the Navy as an ordinary seaman and was sent to a minesweeper off the Scottish coast. He had no sooner arrived there than he was told to return to London to learn Russian. Hitler’s attack in June 1941 had brought the Soviet Union into the war and it was soon bearing the brunt of the resistance to Nazi Germany. With the USSR now a crucial ally of Britain, there was a need for liaison purposes for people in the armed forces who spoke Russian. On the basis of his outstanding ability and achievements in classics, Richard Kindersley was deemed to be a suitable candidate to learn Russian quickly – which he did, for he was a first-rate linguist.

As a naval officer who had just celebrated his 21st birthday, Kindersley was then sent on one of the hazardous convoys to northern Russia. From October 1943 he was based for a year and a half in Polyarny, near Murmansk. He was one of three Russian interpreters there who maintained contact between British and Soviet senior officers. This also involved them in taking turns to travel to Murmansk and Arkhangelsk. In November 1944 Kindersley had the sombre task, as interpreter, of boarding two British ships repatriating 11,000 Soviet nationals as well as bringing into northern Russia Norwegian troops who were to take part in the liberation of their own country. The heavy escort of Soviet destroyers for the two British vessels was an ominous sign. For those Soviet citizens returning to their homeland, this was no liberation. They were met by the NKVD and dispatched to the Gulag.

Kindersley subsequently spent several months in Moscow, interpreting for Rear Admiral Jack Egerton. When, some years after the collapse of the Soviet Union, the post-Soviet Russian authorities decided to acknowledge the fact that many British sailors had lost their lives and still more had risked their lives, bringing assistance to a Soviet Union under siege, Richard Kindersley was among the survivors awarded a medal. Characteristically, for he was modest to a fault, he did not trouble to attend the Russian Embassy ceremony to pick it up.

Richard returned to Cambridge after the war and switched to Modern Languages. Part II of his degree was in Russian and French. His proficiency in Russian was such that he was called upon for some very high-level interpreting. A Soviet delegation in Britain in 1947 paid a visit to the Hyde Park Gate home of Winston Churchill, by which time the wartime Prime Minister was, of course, Leader of the Opposition. Richard Kindersley was one of the interpreters present and had the task of translating the toasts. When it came the turn of an Uzbek delegate (as Dame Elizabeth Hill recorded in her posthumously-published memoirs) to propose the health of Mrs Clementine Churchill, he praised her to the skies, not least for visiting the Soviet Union to witness the ravages of war there, but lost his thread at the last moment and asked those present ‘to drink to the health of Eleanora Roosevelt!’ How Richard met the challenge is described by Lisa Hill: Our interpreter, who never forgot to be a diplomat, calmly translated the speech into impeccable English and ended by asking us to drink to the health of Clementine Churchill. The look of petrified horror vanished from the speaker, crushed by his gaffe.
He got into the official car to take him back to the hotel, knowing he would soon be grilled by his political control and, sure enough, the poor man was never allowed to speak again in public. In the car he shook Kindersley’s hand, with tears in his eyes, and thanked him for smoothing out his mistake. He too had understood only the last two names in English.

Since this was still six years before Stalin’s death, such slips could have consequences more serious than a ban on public speaking. Thus, the Soviet Uzbek visitor had good cause to be grateful.

After a hazardous war and subsequent interpreting duties of the kind just mentioned, Richard became a graduate student at Cambridge, spending a year also at Yale. He had now changed his primary focus from Russian language and literature to Russian history, with a particular interest in the history of ideas. He completed a Cambridge doctorate in 1957 under the supervision of Dr Nikolay Andreyev and developed it into an excellent book published by Oxford University Press in 1962, The First Russian Revisionists: A Study of ‘Legal Marxism’ in Russia. This referred to a group of Russian radicals who came together in the 1890s. They were at that time Marxists, but Marxists of a very different cast of mind from that of Lenin. They were Westernisers who admired Western freedoms which were to be part of the socialist ends to which they aspired – not merely a means to a revolutionary end, after which they could be discarded. The book pays particular attention to Petr Struve, but examines also the writings and activities of Mikhail Tugan-Baranovsky, Sergey Bulgakov, Nikolay Berdyaev and Semyon Frank. It is a book well worth reading, or re-reading, almost 50 years after it was first published.

In 1959 Kindersley married Anne Karminski, whom he had met at Cambridge. She was the daughter of Sir Seymour Karminiski, then a High Court Judge in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, and his wife Susan Burney. By that time Kindersley was in the Foreign Office. He had been a Lecturer in Russian and French at the Royal Naval College, Dartmouth, from 1954 to 1956, and in 1957 he joined the FO. He worked mainly in the Research Department, but from 1964 to 1967 was First Secretary in the British Embassy in Yugoslavia. He had speedily learned Serbo-Croat (or Serbian as it would now be correct to call it), doing so with his usual linguistic proficiency, before moving to Belgrade. The Kindersleys’ home became a meeting-place for their Yugoslav friends and for those Westerners who, like the Kindersleys, never adopted a patronising attitude to the local population but wished to learn more about their culture and politics.
Richard Kindersley was encouraged by Bill (later Sir William) Deakin, the first Warden of St Antony’s – who as a British army officer had been parachuted into Yugoslavia in 1943 and fought alongside Tito – to apply for a post in Oxford. He got the job, becoming a Fellow of St Antony’s in 1967 and Faculty Lecturer in International Communism. When Richard and Anne were, as a result, looking for a house near Oxford, one rather grand lady and potential vendor wished to know what he did for a living. On being told that he lectured in International Communism, she drew herself up to her full height and demanded to know: ‘For or against?’ When the question was posed as starkly as that, there could be only one answer, and the would-be buyers passed the test.

Richard Kindersley spent 22 years as a teaching Fellow of St Antony’s and remained a very active Emeritus Fellow in the period of more than 20 years since his retirement in 1989. In 1981 a book he edited, In Search of Eurocommunism, was published in the college series published by Macmillan. The title contained a hint of scepticism about the subject as well as an echo of the travel books of H V Morton. Richard did not publish as much as his talents suggested and as he undoubtedly would have done had he enjoyed better health. Over most of his adult life he struggled bravely with clinical depression. In his last years he suffered from Parkinson’s Disease as well as extreme deafness.

I remember Richard telling me of a conversation he had with Sammy (S E) Finer in Summertown some time after they had both retired, in Finer’s case from the Gladstone Chair of Government. Finer told Richard that he was writing the history of government. ‘A history of government?’, Richard said. ‘No’, Sammy replied, ‘The History of Government’. ‘That’s not a very modest title’, said Richard. ‘I’m not a very modest man’ was Sammy’s response. Indeed, though Finer (who died in 1993) was a truly notable scholar, ‘modest’ is not the first adjective one would reach for in describing him.

Richard, in contrast, was exceptionally modest and self-deprecating. He had a natural courtesy and was never condescending. The large turnout at his funeral service at St Peter’s Church, Wolvercote, at which Richard was a regular worshipper, included many Antonians as well as relatives and other friends. It reflected the deep respect and affection in which Richard was held. He is survived by Anne.

Sir Marrack Goulding July 2010

It was with great sorrow that we reported the recent death of Sir Marrack Goulding, our much respected and admired fourth Warden. Sir Marrack, who was born in Plymouth in 1936, had a distinguished career in the Diplomatic Service, serving, among other things, as Private Secretary to three successive Ministers of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. From 1983–1985 he was British Ambassador to Angola and São Tomé and Príncipe and was then appointed by UN Secretary-General to the position of Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs. From 1993–1997 he served as the UN’s Under-Secretary-General for Political Affairs. He then came to St Antony’s where he was Warden from 1997 to 2006. In his time at the college, he provided strong leadership and an effective administration. The college owes him much.

Dr Ronald Hingley July 2010

Governing Body and Emeritus Fellow. Dr Hingley was a Governing Body Fellow from 1961 to 1987 and a regular visitor to the college as Emeritus Fellow from 1987 onwards.
