King Bhumibol Adulyadej’s period, to forecast the future of the royal institution. The primary objective is to employ such concept to assess the position of the king-in-waiting and consequently to imagine the place of the Thai monarch in a new political environment. The main argument is that the concept of neo-royalism, based on the unsurpassed qualities of Bhumibol, relentlessly promoted by royalists, is a dangerous entrapment for the next king, and indeed, for the monarchical institution and its entire network. Moreover, the undemocratic nature of the royal power has increasingly become incompatible with, or even antithetical to, the changing political landscape of Thailand. This situation engenders a dilemma for the next king. Vajiralongkorn could either insist on consolidating his political power despite his obvious deficits in the required qualities—and thus provoke failure as well as possible rejection from the public and even some conservative royalists—or to undergo major reforms of the monarchy, placing it strictly within the border of the constitution to save his throne. The recent political initiatives of Vajiralongkorn during the political crisis of 2013-2014 suggest he might be interested in political activism despite his limited political capital and personal capabilities.

Pavin Chachavalpongpun is associate professor at the Centre for Southeast Asian Studies, Kyoto University. He is currently a Beaufort Visiting Scholar at St John's College, University of Cambridge. Pavin holds a PhD from SOAS and is the author of two books, A Plastic Nation: The Curse of Thainess in Thai-Burmese Relations and Reinventing Thailand: Thaksin and His Foreign Policy. He is also editor of the recent ‘Good Coup’ Gone Bad: Thailand’s Political Developments since Thaksin’s Downfall. Pavin is also a chief editor of the online journal Kyoto Review of Southeast Asia. After the coup of 2014, Pavin was summoned by the coup-makers for being critical of the military. He rejected the summons and, as a result, a warrant was issued for his arrest. His passport was revoked shortly afterwards. This situation forced him to apply for a refugee status in Japan.

All are welcome

Convenor: Dr M Walton
Enquiries: asian@sant.ox.ac.uk or tel: 01865-274559
Pictures: (left) Monument to Crown Prince Maha Vajiralongkorn, Copyleft Adam Carr; (centre) Monument to King Bhumibol Adulyadej (Rama IX) of Thailand, as seen in Phitsanulok, copyleft ChrisO.

St Antony's College is a registered charity (number 1141293)