Biographical history: Bailey, Sheilagh Elizabeth (b.1929)

Born Tanganyika (now Tanzania) in 1929. Her father was in the Tanganyika Police and retired as Deputy Commissioner. She grew up there until she was seven, when her mother died and she and her sister, Patricia, went to boarding school in Sussex, England. Her father married again and she and Patricia then went to school in Umtali, Zimbabwe. When she left school she joined the Tanganyika Colonial Service and served there until independence in 1963. On leaving the Service she joined the British Government and served with them in London and Sarawak, Borneo. She finally left this Service and went out to the Sultanate of Oman in 1972, just after Sultan Qaboos took over the country from his father in a coup. She served in His Majesty's Palace Office, which she helped to form, under his Chief Adviser, Brigadier J.T.W. Landon until finally retiring to London in 1984. She was awarded The Order of Oman by His Majesty Sultan Qaboos on her retirement in recognition of her services rendered to the Sultanate.
